Dread Soldiers Above Everything, Says Petition

OUTLINE SCHEME

Delegation Sent To Peking To Plead City's Case

(Chang Mei Service)

Peking, March 22.—The Tsingtau Chamber of Commerce sent a vigorous petition to the President and the Cabinet today urging certain constructive provisions respecting the future government and organisation of Tsingtau. The first things they want is a freedom from troops of all kind and a charter with which they may govern themselves.

They cite the growth of Tsingtau commercially and are enthusiastic as to its future. In this connection they give praise to both the Germans and Japanese for their engergy in the installation of improvements.

"It is essential that these improvements be continued and that there be good government," they say. "Furthermore this city, so long the bone of contention between China and other powers should make up for lost time and become a city of peace where the commerce of the world is benefited." The text of the petition is as follows:

"The district of Tsingtau has been foreign territory now for twenty years. It is indeed fortunate that through the continued efforts of the people and government and the co-operation of other powers, this soil is again our own and this fact has caused untold joy throughout all of China. In the midst of these raptures and joy we must reflect for the futu and we take this occasion to place before you some of our many unsolved problems with our suggestions and petition.

FORMERLY WILD PLACE

"Tsingtau was formerly a barren and wild place. Thanks to the efforts of the Germans and their investments added to those which the Japanese have made, this spot has become a flourishing city and is now only second to Shanghai and Tientsin. Tsingtau can now be developed into a still greater commerical center. If its administration is proper there will be no limit to its progress. As the time now draws near for the Japanese to withdraw we are convinced that your excellency has entertained many and far reaching plans for the administration of Tsingtau, but we also believe that your excellency has been misinformed as to the details of some of the problems and is ignorant of the chrystallised public opinion of the city. Our Chamber of Commerce having repeatedly called together all the leading merchants and bankers and other important personages for the discussion of the future of Tsingtau is now prepared to give you a summary of their opinion and their unanimous recommendations.

"1. The participation between Japan and China was left open for discussion between the two nations. This we believe to be a question of very great importance and, so that you may be fully informed as to the details of this problem we have elected six members of our community to represent us and we are sending them to Peking, so that they may confer with you and advise you upon this matter.

"SPARE US THE TROOPS"

"2. We do not think any troops should be stationed in Tsingtau. Formerly the city was a naval base, but it is now a commercial center. It is open for international commerce and as such should be permitted to have troops stationed there according to international law. Our people are more frightened of the havoc to be wrought by troops than of any other danger. Much enterprise depends upon whether there are to be troops stationed here or not. Troops make for insecurity. The situa-

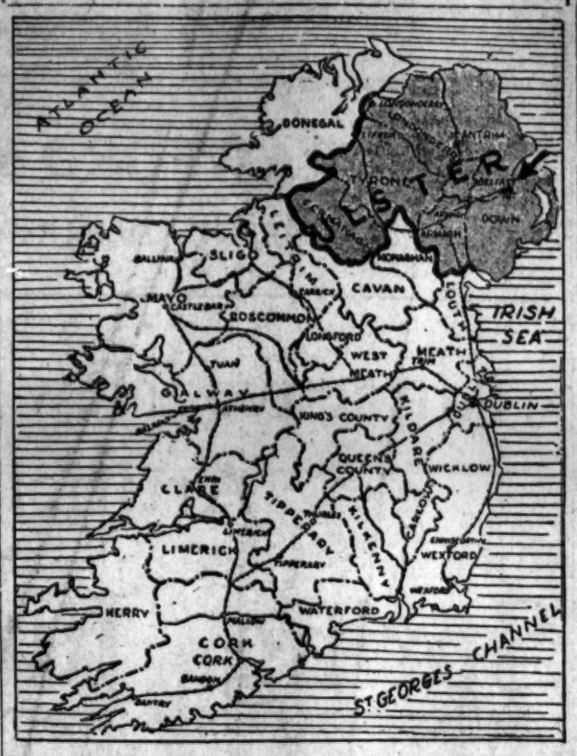
War Torn Ireland



THIS map of Ireland shows the Ulster boundary line over which there is so much trouble just now. Belfast, the city in which a Catholic named MacMahon and his four sons were brutally murdered yesterday, as told in the news despatch in another column of today's CHINA PRESS, is indicated by the arrow. Belfast is now torn with bitter political strife, with an almost daily story of violence.

HOUSE WARNED NOT TO REDUCE NAVY TOO MUCH

(China Press Service)

Washington, March 24.—Mr. McArthur of the House Naval Committee warned the House against drastic reductions in the army and navy appropriations declaring that the committee was apparently providing only 65,000 men for the navy. Mr. McArthur said that this would place the United States navy in a perilously dangerous position.

Government Fails To Bring Owners And Miners Together

Canadian Bank Officials Accused

(Reuter's Service)

Ottawa, March 24.—There is a sensation in banking circles owing to the Dominion Minister of Finance proceeding against Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Hugh Montagu Allan, President of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, and Mr. MacCarow, the General Manager, on a charge of wilfully misstating the financial position of the Bank in its October official return by their alleged omission to mention a great impairment of the reserved funds of the Bank.

ZIMBALIST, 'POET OF VIOLIN,' TO BE HERE IN APRIL

Efrem Zimbalist, who is now on a tour of Japan where he is giving 19 concerts before his arrival in Shanghai next month for his concerts here on April 20 and 22, has recently acquired the title, "Poet of the Violin."

The title was unanimously bestowed upon Zimbalist by music critics throughout the United States, who unite in praising this master violinist.

Zimbalist's rare talents which brought him into prominence in the music world at an early age are inherited from his violinist father who was also orchestral conductor in Rostov-on-Don, Russia. At 9 years, the young son of the conductor was a member of the local operatic orchestra and had frequently astounded audiences by his virtuosity as a soloist. A year or so later he was taken to Petrograd where he was immediately accepted as a pupil of the famous Professor Auer. Zimbalist graduated from the Conservatory at the end of six years, winning first prize. From the moment he stepped forth on his career, he was lauded and lionised, in recitals and orchestral appearances in Hamburg, Berlin, Bremen, Petrograd, London and in America.

The violinist's talent is by no means confined to the violin; he plays the piano with rare skill. While on his honeymoon with Alma Gluck, the singer, in Europe, just before the war, he was one of the pianists in a hastily organised "jazz" band composed entirely of master musicians, including Josef Hofmann, Schelling, Stojowski and Weingartner. The distinguished conductor, Weingartner, knot time with a poker, while the other four musicians arranged themselves at two pianos and pounded out classical jazz. The four pianists let their fancies roam at will. Always in perfect time, each introduced his original ideas in the matter of harmony until the result was a creation that brought down the house.

The occasion of the jazz festival was the birthday of Paderewski, who was present, and the place was Switzerland. It was shortly after this that Zimbalist and Alma Gluck returned to America, in 1914, just escaping the beginning of the war.

Ordered From Beds, Lined Up And Shot

SLAYERS CHASED

Police Pursuers Are Ambushed, Three Killed

(Reuter's Service)

Belfast, March 24.—The city was stirred by an early morning raid when one MacMahon, a Catholic saloon keeper, and three sons were brutally shot and killed. A fourth son died of wounds and two others were seriously wounded.

The murdered Belfast publican family of McMahon were Roman Catholics.

The raiders broke into the house, forced the MacMahons to get out of bed, lined them against a wall and shot them. Then they departed.

Mrs. MacMahon and her daughter rushed into the room and found seven outstretched on the floor.

Fifty police pursued the dastards in motor trucks and were ambushed in County Tyrone.

The police then pursued the men who had ambushed them in a running fight lasting for six hours. Three police were killed on the Tyrone border.

Numerous Unionist houses have been burned. There were seven deaths today from violence.

Machine-guns fired sporadically across the border from the south this afternoon.

London, March 25.—Rivalling in savagery the worst pre-truce crimes, yesterday's outrage in Belfast has provoked not only universal condemnation, but alarm lest the vicious circle of reprisals and counter-reprisals would necessitate the military occupation of the affected areas, which it is feared would spell doom to the Peace Treaty.

The seriousness with which the Government regards the situation is evidenced by the summoning of Sir James Craig and Mr. Collins to Dublin.

The press, realising that only some sort of truce can avert very grave developments, renews its appeal for an immediate conference between the North and the South.

For the first time the Northern Government has called up its whole force of 30,000 special constables. The destruction of property on the frontier continues on a large scale from Auchnacloy to Caledon, which, with its armed camp, continues to be the most dangerous district.

London, March 24.—The Irish Treaty Bill has completed the report stage, the House of Lords adopting an amendment moved by the Government, to which the Irish Provisional Government previously assented, postponing the month allowed to Ulster in which to decide whether or not to join the Irish Free State, until the Free State constitution bill has been passed, instead of dating from the passage of the Treaty Bill.

This alteration provoked vigorous protests from Sir Edward Carson, Lord Londonderry and others, who complained that the Government wanted to keep the boundaries question in suspense, so as to enable the southern Irish to continue "murdering and raiding."

(China Press Service)

London, March 24.—The Colonial office announced that owing to the gravity of the situation in Ireland, Craig and Collins had been invited to come to London to confer with the British Government.

2,000,000 Tons Of Shipping Idle In U. Kingdom Ports

(Reuter's Service)

London, March 24.—There are now over 2,000,000 tons of shipping, British and foreign, lying unemployed in the 30 principal ports of the United Kingdom, of which 1,900,000 tons are British, which means that altogether 2,500,000 tons of British shipping are unemployed out of a total of 18,000,000. The position of American shipping is worse, 5,000,000 tons of American standard shipping out of a total of 12,500,000 lying idle in addition to a large amount privately owned.

On Page 13 of this issue of THE CHINA PRESS Bruce Hopper begins a series of articles descriptive of the sixteen months' journey which took him from Oxford to Burma and finally to Shanghai through "China's Back Door."

RESERVATION EXEMPTS U. S. FROM OBLIGATION TO EMPLOY ARMED FORCE

Final Vote 67 To 27, Four More Than Necessary; Twelve Democrats Cast Ballots For Pact, While Four Republicans Take Stand Against It; Many Amendments Rejected

"NO ALLIANCE" IS ALSO SPECIFIED

"No Obligation To Join In Any Defence" Written Into Treaty Before Final Passage; In Final Form Document Appears To Be Innocuous As Far As America Is Concerned

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, March 24.—The Pacific Treaty was ratified with a reservation declaring that the United States understands that the Treaty involves no commitment to armed force, no alliance, and no obligation to join in any defence.

(China Press Service)

Washington, March 24.—The Four Power Treaty was ratified by a vote of 67 to 27 which was four more than the necessary two-thirds. Twelve democrats voted for the ratification and four republicans against.

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, March 24.—The Senate voted down by a vote of 61 to 23 the Robinson amendment to article one of the Treaty pledging the signatories against secret pacts. Article one was adopted by a vote of 74 to 15.

It rejected, 59 to 33 the Robinson amendment to article two pledging that there shall be no aggression against outside powers and permitting outsiders to sit at the conferences when their interests are affected.

It rejected, 63 to 29, the Hitchcock amendment making Article Two apply only to unprovoked aggression. It rejected, 73 to 13, the Shields amendment that the United States does not intend to abandon its traditional policies. It rejected 62 to 29 the Reed amendment that the signatories shall not be bound by the conference decisions under Article Two.

It rejected 65 to 27 the Reed amendment denying the obligation to go to war under the Treaty decisions. It rejected 65 to 26 the Johnson amendment that only "pacific" methods against outside aggression could be considered.

It then adopted Article Two upon which the Treaty opponents have centered their fight by a vote of sixty six to twenty eight.

It rejected 64 to 29 the Reed amendment to article three to terminate the treaty automatically in ten years or earlier by twelve months notice. It rejected, 63 to 28 the Reed amendment to permit signatories to withdraw on two years' notice.

It then approved 67 to 26 Article Three stipulating the life of the Treaty.

The Senate then approved 73 to 18 Article Four the final one for the exchange of ratifications.

That ended the opportunity for offering amendments and consideration of the proposed reservations was begun. The following reservations were rejected

Walsh, Montana, 55 to 36 admitting outsiders to the conferences;

Robinson 56 to 36 prohibiting aggression against outsiders.

Pitman, 60 to 31, inviting outsiders to the conference; also by sixty to twenty seven the Pintman's Amendment. One inviting outsiders, declaring "It being the intention of the United States to grant complete independence to the Philippines within ten years" and that the integrity of the Islands shall be respected thereafter;

Lafollette's, reservation 62 to 23, that the Anglo Japanese alliance shall not be renewed during the life of the treaty; also by 59 to 27 his reservation prohibiting pacts prejudicial to the Treaty; and by 64 to 17 the providing for the abrogation of all existing treaties inconsistent with the Four Power pact;

Pittman, 65 to 28, a verbatim Nations reservation regarding the copy of the Lodge League of United States reserving the right to define domestic questions;

Johnson, 63 to 29, that only "pacific" means be used to enforce the Treaty;

Johnson, 64 to 28, that the United States assumes no moral or legal obligation to maintain the rights of other powers;

Robinson, 60 to 32 pledging against secret diplomacy.

Reed, 63 to 28, reserving the right to withdraw from the treaty if any signatory wrongfully engages in war;

Reed, 64 to 24, that conferences under the Treaty shall not apply to controversies growing from occupation of any portion of the Asiatic mainland;

Reed, 64 to 24, that the United States may withdraw on a year's notice;

The Senate then adopted the committee's "no alliance" reservation by a vote of 90 to two.

SECRET SOCIETIES GAINING GROUND IN NORTH KIANGSU

"Red Fists" Favor Monarchy And Collect Large Sums From People

(China Press Correspondence)

Suchowfu, Ku., March 21.—The Red Plume Society; The Red Fist Society—Big Knife Society (The Boxers); The United Fist Society, are the popular names given to an organisation that has been slowly spreading from the West to the East during the past year until now they have reached within seven miles of this city.

The devotees of this popular secret society wear yellow bands emblazoned with the character for "Charms" in red. The meaning seems to be that they lead a "charmed" life immune to bullets.

Their program as far as can be learned is anti-republic, anti-foreign church and anti-President. They favor the monarchy. The leaders collect considerable sums from the people, running from 500 cash to 10,000 cash per member. Farmers are selling their land with the motto, in mind "eat, drink, and be merry, for the world will soon be ours." Many of the villagers are studying the incantations of the new society. So far no acts of violence have been atributed to the society.

The construction of the Lung Hai railroad Eastward is proceeding rapidly. Construction trains are now running for twenty miles.

SUFFER FROM FAMINE

In parts of the Suchowfu district famine conditions prevail, and there will be much suffering before harvest, but the prospects for the new wheat crop are unusually good. The cold weather of February and March will doubtless insure a fine fruit crop. Well-kept orchards abound in this section, which is probably one of the best fruit districts in China. Delicious cherries, peaches, plums and pears are grown in large quantities; but almost entirely for local consumption.

The nearness to large markets and good railway connections should make fruit growing a profitable industry, but the railroad has succeeded in discouraging such an industry by leaving fruit transporation largely in the hands of the express companies, whose rates are exhorbitant and almost prohibitive.

BIGAMY CHARGE NEW OBSTACLE FOR SEMENOFF

New legal complications in the shape of a charge of bigamy have arisen for Ataman Semenoff, who lately left Shanghai for America, and who has been held at Vancouver, B. C. until a special order was issued from Washington permitting his entry into the United States.

When Semenoff sailed with a special American State Department Passport he used an assumed name and after his arrival at Vancouver, B. C. he was made defendant in a suit filed at New York by C. B. Richardson & Company who charged that he had wrongfully taken possession of $110,000 worth of furs when they were on route through Siberia.

Latest advices say that Semenoff has been granted the privilege of entry into the United States and following upon these comes a report that charges of bigamy against him have been filed with the American Embassy at Tokio by a woman who calls herself Madame Zenaida Semenoff, who is now living in Yokohama with her 7-year-old son. She alleges that the woman who sailed with Semenoff as his wife is a Mlle. Tersitsky, who formerly was the Ataman's stenographer at Chita.

Madame Semenoff asserts that she was married to Semenoff in Chita in 1914 and has never been divorced. Her first intimation that Semenoff had another wife was revealed in dispatches that Semenoff had sailed with "his wife." Madame Semenoff made the following statement of her charges which have been forwarded to the State Department at Washington for investigation.

"I, the undersigned," the statement continues, "am the first and only legal wife of Ataman Semenoff. I have been residing in Japan since October 20, 1920. I came to Japan at his instructions and at his expense, with our son Vlatchestav. I have not been living with him for some time, but I have never been divorced from him. Therefore his second so-called marriage, due to the existence of his legal and undivorced wife, is bigamy. In all civilised countries it must be so recognised and held accountable by the law.

"Zenaida Semenoff"

GEN. WU LAUDS JUSTICE CHIEF'S GRAFT INQUIRY

Sees Great Moral Effect On Public Mind

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, March 22.—In a further telegram to Mr. Tung Kang, Minister of Justice and Chairman of the Loan Investigation Commission, General Wu Pei-fu on the 20th instant acknowledges receipt of Mr. Tung's letter, which General Wu describes as an admirable example of a clear and concise statement. General Wu then goes on to say that in recent years the official standard in China has fallen very low.

When the scheme to float the $96,000,000 bond issue was launched he caused inquiries to be made and ascertained that the plan deserved the condemnation of right-thinking people. Again and again he protested, pointing out that the officials concerned were taking advantage of their country's dire need to serve their own selfish purposes. At first public opinion had been against him on the ground that he was going too far, but now, thanks to the honest inquiry conducted by Mr. Tung, the true facts of the case were known through the length and breadth of the land.

Mr. Tung's investigation had made the rascals timid while it buoyed up the hopes of honest people. Then to his great surprise General Wu heard that the investigation would be abandoned. He could not believe that report. Mr. Tung's character was too high for him to cease the investigation. The post he held as Chairman of the Commission of Investigation was too important for the duties attaching to that office to fall short of complete fulfilment.

But rumors of that description should not be taken too lightly. They had their effect on the minds of the public. They were aimed at the spirit of justice and the free performance of duty. Indeed a very important principle was involved in this case.

Since the inauguration of the Republic, political affairs had always been conducted through improper channels. More than once had political affairs been subjected to outside influence, and the will of the people had played but an insignificant part in the conduct of the country's affairs. This was greatly to be regretted. It must be changed.

General Wu hoped that Mr. Tung would inaugurate a new era in judicial affairs, as an example to be followed by all officials in all the public departments of China, by displaying complete impartiality in his investigation into this really important affair.

MOTOR ROUTES PROVING POPULAR ABOUT HSUCHOW

(China Press Correspondence)

Hsuchowfu, March 21.—This city is the center of great activity in automobile passenger service. West of us about 70 miles there is a daily service operating between Kweiteh on the Lung Hai and Poachow, a distance of about 45 miles. From three to five cars run daily each way, and the traffic is increasingly heavy. This road is now being put in excellent condition through the work of famine refugees, who are being fed by means of famine relief. The city of Kweiteh, or rather a company of business men of the city is financing the metalling of the road from the railroad to the city, a distance of about five miles.

Another road that is proving very useful extends from Nanshuchow on the Tientsin Pukow line to Poachow via Yungcheng in Honan, a distance of 80 miles. This run is made every other day. The Dodge and Seymour Agency have opened a large service station in Suchowfu under foreign supervision. Cars are kept here for hire for a special run to Suisien—80 miles Southeast—and business men of this city frequently use them.

A local Chinese motor company have leased from the service station a large motor bus, and operate same from the city gates to the railroad station. The bus is kept running for fourteen hours a day, being operated in two shifts.

We hear that a Shanghai engineering company is investigating the prospect of installing a modern water supply system in the city. With the city growing as rapidly as it is, and with drinking water as expensive as it now is, this should prove a profitable undertaking.

The Lung Hai line is pushing steadily Eastward toward the sea. Rails are now laid for twenty miles Eastward, and the grading is complete to the crossing of the Grand Canal, about 45 miles from the city.

Famine conditions seem to be acute, at least in one of our hsiens, a little Southeast of the city. Prices of grain and sweet potatoes are considerably higher than the highest point ever reached in any previous famine. Wages, of course, have risen also, but those who own no land and who live far from the railroad are facing hunger, the worst they have experienced in ten years.

General Baron Tanaka, according to an announcement just made, has been accorded the Distinguished Service Medal by the United States Government.

H'kong Caddies Strike Without Stating Reasons

Between 200 and 300 caddies employed on the Fanling Gold Links at Hongkong are on strike, without notification and without presenting any demands or reasons for their walk-out. The Club has posted a notice which is a virtual lockout for the strikers. One possible reason suggested for the strike is that the caddie master has been receiving payment for the squad in Hongkong money, and has remunerated the boys in less valuable Canton currency. Another is that several playing members have violated the club ruling against tipping and thus have created dissatisfaction against those who abide by the rules and do not tip.

Charged With Issue Of Worthless Check

Charges of having passed a check for $110 on Mr. W. Fredericks, proprietor of Fredericks Hotel on Jukong Road, without having the funds in bank, were brought against Mr. John W. Cotter in the United States Court before Commissioner F. J. Schuhl yesterday.

The defendant declared that at the time the check was issued he asked Mr. Fredericks to hold it two or three days, by which time he would have had sufficient funds on deposit. His children were ill at the time, he submitted, and he was in need of the money.

The case was adjourned by the Commissioner pending a discussion with U. S. District Attorney C. P. Holcomb.

Denby Quizzed On Sale Of G. Northern

(China Press Service)

Washington, Feb. 15.—The house naval committee today asked secretary of the navy, Edwin Denby, to appear Tuesday and give information regarding the sale by the shipping board to the Pacific Steamship company of the steamer Great Northern. The request was made after Representative McClintic (dem.) of Oklahoma, presented a letter from an unnamed naval officer which quoted F. A. Alexander, president of the Pacific Steamship company as saying he forced the sale of the ship and that he was bigger than Secretary Denby. Representative McClintic said it was reported the sale was made five days before the date set for opening bids.

American Woman's Club Notes

Mr. Charles Kliene addressed the American Woman's Club at its general meeting last Tuesday on "Chinese Mythology," drawing significant parallels between the early monotheistic religion of the Chinese which antedated Confucianism and the early Egyptian faith. In scientific and scholarly fashion Mr. Kliene traced the resemblances between these two ancient religions instancing similarities in ritual, ideographs and mythology.

On Wednesday afternoon a number of ladies from the Literary Department of the American Woman's Club visited the art collection of Mr. R. D. Abraham at 502 Avenue Foch where they saw a most interesting selection of paintings, chiefly of the Sung and Ming Dynasties.

On Tuesday, March 28, the Club is giving a dinner in honor of Mrs. Jacob Gould Schurman, the wife of the American Minister to China, at the Union Club at 8 o'clock. Miss Bernice Austin, of the American School, will speak on this subject and will illustrate her theories with pertinent demonstrations, using a victrola and also giving songs at the piano to illustrate how children may learn worth-while music. Her address will include pointers on the choice of material, its presentation and the training of the child's voice. This musical lecture will be of interest to all and it is not at all confined to the members of the department.

CHANG NAMES STIFF TERMS FOR PREMIERSHIP

Wholesale Pardon Of Anfuites Is One Condition

(China Press Correspondence)

Peking, March 25.—The wholesale pardon of all Anfuite political offenders and the appointment of Chang Hsun, the monarchist, to some suitable position are the conditions named by Marshal Chang Tso-lin of Mukden for the appointment of Pao Kwei-ching, the president's nominee, for the premiership.

Pao is unable to accept the terms on behalf of the president and has gone to Tientsin under the pretext that his eye needs medical attention there. Meanwhile, Chang Tso-lin has instructed Liang Shih-yi to cancel his leave of absence and resume the premiership.

President Hsu is reported to be drafting a circular telegram, offering his own resignation on account of the deadlock which is paralysing the entire administrative system. He disapproves the return to power of Liang Shih-yi, who remains defiant. In a recent message to the chief executive, Liang stated that he had committed no offense against the law of the land and if President Hsu desired to get rid of him, he would have to dismiss him and give publicity to the reason why the dismissal is ordered.

Hsu has sent both his secretary and an eye specialist to Tientsin to induce Pao to come back to Peking.

Dr. W. W. Yen, the Acting Premier, has consented to serve for another week as beginning from Thursday and Hsu has informed him that unless a new Premier is secured by the end of the month, he will retire simultaneously with Yen.

A significant fact has been the absence of Tung Kung, Acting Minister of Justice, at the Cabinet meetings since Thursday. Tung, who started sensational charges against the former Ministers of Finance, has returned to his former office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Dr. Wang Chung-hui, Chinese delegate to the Washington Conference, following his conference with President Hsu, has consented to take over the Justice portfolio from Tung and to assume his duties on Monday. He will head the Commission on Investigation of Extraterritoriality, which has been created as a result of the deliberations of the Washington Conference.

Unification of the country, disarmament and reorganisation of the entire system was urged by Dr. Wang when he called on the President on Friday. He said that if China does not put her own house in order during the next ten years, her independence will end like a bubble. A coalition cabinet and the immediate calling of a parliament were also advocated by Dr. Wang at the conference.

JUSTICE CHIEF'S WAR ON GRAFT O.K.'D. BY SAGE

"First Worthy Thing In Ten Years," He Tells Kang

(Chung Mei Service)

Peking, March 22.—Kang Yu-wei, China's most noted and respected literary man has again come into the open in political affairs and has begun with a strong endorsement of Tung Kang's investigation of the ministry of finance.

"Your action," he writes, "is the first thing worthy of record during the last ten years. If this corruption continues our nation must perish."

There is probably, perhaps, no Chinese scholar living whose statements will obtain so much weight among the people as a whole and the letter published below will have more influence than all those from the Tuchuns and Super Tuchuns put together.

Tung Kang, himself, has stated that this support from China's first scholar, the so called living Confucius, was the finest testimonial of his work that he had received.

Kang Yu-wei was a great reformer even under the Manchus and had been forced by them to seek asylum in Japan. Although once captured by Manchu soldiers, his standing was so high among the Chinese people that they did not dare punish him as ordered. The letter follows:

"It is nearly ten years since we met in Japan. During this period the virtuous have frequently suffered calamity and state affairs have been going from bad to worse, especially the finance. The people's and the nation's funds have been freely seized by powerful and influential bandits. Many of our fellow countrymen were slaughtered when Yuan Shih-kai was assuming the title of an emperor and Tuan Chi-jui was fighting in Hupeh. The results are that the people's wealth have gone into the pockets of the selfish authorities.

"During the last ten years imprudent fellows have worked for personal ends, and seized public funds. This has become an established precedent. The same condition prevails in financial and banking circles. No stable government can be established while its finances are in so chaotic a condition. With the national funds stolen it is but natural that our country is bankrupt.

"That official salaries are suspended and the staff are starving has never happened during the past several thousand years of peace and prosperity. That which is now of paramount importance is to cultivate virtue and next to that, to establish law. But at present virtue has broken down and the law is neglected.

"The laws are used only to restrict the people, not the high authorities. What the officials have pocketed is the fat of the people. As the law here is impotent every official is seeking to embezzle the public funds. Therefore it becomes a precedent and what the predecessors have done will be copied unscrupulously. And our country will perish.

"Now I have learned that you are conducting an investigation into the Ministry of Finance and dealing with the scandal according to justice and law, in the hope of uncovering the evil practices and punishing the corrupt officials. What you are doing is as a thunderclap to startle the whole nation.

"This is the first thing worthy of record in the last ten years. I hope you will hold on to the last, without changing your purpose, or being influenced by other feelings, or yielding to the wishes of your superiors, or being frightened by threats. It is necessary to show justice and to right the wrongs, acording to the great givor of the law. By so doing your reputation will be as great as that of Hsiao Su and Chung Chieh and as bright as the sun or the moon."

"Get The Navy Out Of Water And Into Sky," Slogan

(Reuter's Service)

London, March 24.—The House of Commons adopted the Naval Estimates today after a debate in which Rear-Admiral Sueter contended that the estimates were excessive on the assumption that there will be no war for ten years. He said that the battleships now being built would be obsolete by then and that to abandon the building of battleships now would not weaken our Navy. He declared that Naval defence could be safely left to submarines and airmen.

Mr. L. C. M. S. Amery, replied that the Government did not contemplate war with America or Japan. If it did it would be mad to rely merely on one power standards, which the Admiralty interpreted in a way they would not have done if they thought a war likely within the next ten years.

The maintenance of the one power standard, he said, made it essential not to be hopelessly inferior in battleships, which were still the pivot of a naval battle but the Admiralty was convinced of the value of airmen and wanted more and more to get the Navy out of the water and into the air.

In replying to a question Mr. Amery explained that all the estimates had been framed on the assumption that the Naval Treaty signed at Washington would be finally ratified, as he believed it would be, but if, by any grave mischance, it was not ratified, the whole estimates must be revised and reductions would be very largely rendered impossible.

Mr. Amery mentioned that as a result of the Washington agreement, he hoped that Weihaiwei would be dispensed with altogether in a few weeks.

NEW BONUS BILL AUTHORISES BANK LOANS TO "VETS"

Cash Payments Only To Those Entitled To Small Sums

(China Press Service)

Washington, March 25.—The Soldiers' $4,000,000,000 Bonus Bill, passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 333 to 70, differs in two important respects from the bill shelved by the United States Senate last July.

Under the bill passed by the House cash bonuses are eliminated and bank loans to war veterans when the bonus amounts to over $50 are substituted.

The bill provides for cash to be paid for amounts of $50 and under, and gives others the option of four plans of adjusted service certificates with provisions authorising bank loans after October 1, on government certificates to run 20 years. The certificates will have a face value at maturity equal to the amount of adjusted service pay increased 25 percent, plus 4½ percent compound interest.

Vocational training aid after January 1 will be at the rate of $75 per month, provided the total payments do not exceed 140 percent of the adjusted service pay. The bill also makes provision for the purchase of land by veterans from a special land board which will sell the lands at a price minus the total service credit due the veteran.

In the vote on the bill party lines disappeared 240 Republicans and 90 Democrats supporting the measure, and 42 Republicans and 28 Democrats opposing. The bill now goes to the Senate where its fate is doubtful as several senators have announced their intention of fighting it to the last.

LEAGUE BAZAAR WELL ATTENDED; COLORFUL EVENT

A colorful affair, with plenty of incidental entertainment of a high order and a gratifying crowd of patrons was the bazaar held at the Town Hall yesterday afternoon by the Ministering Children's League.

The hall was decorated with the flags of the various nations and the dozen or more of stalls were lavishly stocked with fancy work, art specimens, sweets and other eatables, toys and many other wares which proved of strong appeal to the many visitors. The School for the Blind furnished stock for one of the stalls, including some basket-work of exquisite sort. The Cathedral Girls' School, Public School, Hanbury School and French Municipal School were also handsomely represented.

Tea was served following the official opening of the bazaar by Mme. Wilden and the British Amateur Orchestra discoursed a pleasing program of music throughout the afternoon. As a culminating feature there was an excellent variety program arranged by Mrs. Mann and Mrs. Master.

AGE is no indication of eye condition. Many aged people do not need to wear glasses, whereas many children need them at an early age.

Sometimes children, otherwise bright and intelligent, are backward in school on account of defective eyesight which is entirely unsuspected.

Let us test the eyes of your children. Be sure that you know whether or not their eyes are all right.

BANDIT ADMITS FIGURING IN 30 MURDER CASES

Daring Robber With Long Criminal Record Captured By French Police

A confession that he was the culprit in more than 30 murder cases has been made by Wang Hiao-ti, 23 years old, who was captured together with five others in a general round-up by the French Police at the San Kiang Lodging House, Pakhoi Road, in co-operation with the Settlement police. Many of the cases are still fresh in the memory of residents of Shanghai as they were committed only recently.

The long chain of criminal adventures of Wang included, according to his own confession the shooting of a woman on Avenue Joffre in 1920 after relieving her of a pair of gold bracelets; the murder of Kwan Tse-yu, manager of the Chapei theater in 1921; the shooting and killing of a shroff of the Shanghai Gas Company on North Thibet Road after robbing him of his collections; the murder of a pedestrian on Peking Road and the shooting of a Police constable, No. 1068, early this year.

More than ten other crimes were committed by Wang in Chinese territory. The Woosung and Shanghai Constabulary have applied for the extradition of the accused in order that other charges may be brought against him in the Chinese Courts.

Wang is a native of Shaoshing. At the time of his capture he told the police that they were lucky to have captured him at a time when he was unarmed as they would have paid dearly for his person, as he realises what awaits him for what he does not deny he deserves.

One of the gang was arrested at 6 o'clock on March 17 on Rue Touranne, and the other five an hour later on information given by the first one, in a raid on a lodging house where they were staying on Pakhoi road. No arms were found in their possession when they were captured.

Wang, after he was taken to the police station and examined, said that in return for a good meal he would enumerate the crimes committed by him and his gang. The meal was given to him and he made a full confession.

MME. ZOHA D'ARCY

April Will Be Musical Month; Many Concerts

April will be a real music month in Shanghai for it will be dotted with concerts by Zimbalist, the master violinist, and by a recital which will be given early in the month by Mademoiselle Zoha D'Arcy, who travelled to Shanghai with Madame Lydia Lipkowska, whose protegee she is.

Mademoiselle D'Arcy is the youngest prima donna in operatic circles today. She is only 22, a vivacious brunette, whose voice has the fullness, richness and color that come after years of study, for she has been singing and studying since she was a small girl.

The young prima donna was decorated by Marshal Joffre with the Croix de Guesre for her work during the war when she gave up extensive engagements to sing in Nice, Milan and Monte Carlo in order to do her bit by singing in the trenches for the soldiers, in Nieuport, in Flanders and all over the Western front.

SANG FOR SOLDIERS

She sang throughout the war, from 1917 to the close, for English, French and Americans, alike, and is the only woman who was in the second line trenches. Her war work began shortly after her debut in the Grand Opera of Paris, where she sang Marguerite in "Faust," when she went to the North of France to visit the family of the Senator of the Pas de Calais, in Bethune. The Duke of Connaught heard her voice and persuaded her to sing for the soldiers.

Her pass was o.k.'d personally by the Prince of Wales, who likewise tendered her his thanks for her work. Among her precious war souvenirs are letters from the Prince, from Pershing, and from French generals, as well as hundreds of letters from "Doughboys," "Tommies," and poilus who heard her.

On one occasion when she was giving a concert for 3,000 soldiers, in the middle of an aria from "Traviata," the Germans began dropping bombs in the vicinity of the concert hall. The little singer paused only long enough to instruct her accompanist to change the music and as the pop-pop of anti-aircraft guns sounded outside she broke into the opening strains of "God Save the King."

ENTHRALLS AUDIENCE

The crowd as one man stood in perfect, unbroken silence until the last note died away in the darkened hall, for lights had gone out immediately following the first intimations of the raid. As the soldiers left the hall the whizzing of German planes became dimmer and dimmer, the popping of the anti-aircraft guns louder and more frequent. The raid was over without a casualty.

Mademoiselle D'Arcy's studies were pursued in Paris, for the most part. She went, upon her graduation from the Conservatoire, to Italy where she studied under the famous maestro, Sabatine.

Following the armistice she went to Spain where she gave a series of concerts in Barcelona. From Spain she went to Canada where light opera is regarded with awe and reverence, and sang the title role in "The Merry Widow" revival in Montreal, in 1921. She returned to France for a concert tour, joining Madame Lipkowska in New York upon its conclusion.

Madame Lipkowski's success here has been so overwhelming that she has been forced to give two extra concerts in order to accommodate the hundreds in Shanghai who are clamoring to hear her and have been unable to obtain seats owing to the smallness of the theater.

Her third concert, a costume recital of Spanish and English songs, will be given on Thursday, March 30, and her final concert on Saturday next, April 1.

Madame Lipkowska and Mr. Sklarevski, the pianist, with their party, will leave Shanghai on Sunday for Harbin, Tientsin and Peking, where they will give concerts before sailing to Australia.

$300,000 DRIVE FOR RUSS FAMINE RELIEF LAUNCHED

Program Held At Y.M.C.A., Auto Parade Announces Purpose Of Fund

The $300,000 campaign for Russian Famine Relief was formally inaugurated yesterday. The main program was held in the Memorial Hall, while an automobile parade announced the purpose of the campaign to the general public. Over 60,000 handbills were circulated in Chinese territory and the foreign settlements.

On the automobiles were stretched large white banners bearing Chinese legends: meaning "Relieve your Distressed Neighbor," "International Friendship, Promoted by the People," "The Spirit of Universal Love" and "Help the Russians who Abrogated All Unjust Treaties with China."

A band played patriotic airs in one of the cars while Boy Scouts manned the others to distribute the handbills.

Over 700 people attended the program at the Y.M.C.A. President C. C. Nieh of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce made the opening remarks and speeches were made by Wang Cho-san, secretary of the Peking Russian Famine Relief Committee and the Misses Tsu Chin-shar and Wang Li-ming, Mr. Chao Wei-pin of the Y.M.C.A. presided. A representative of a Russian publication expressed gratitude on behalf of the Russians in Shanghai.

SUN'S PUNITIVE ARMY ON MARCH, NEAR CHANGSHA

Province Unable To Decide Question Of Allegiance

(China Press Correspondence)

Peking, March 25.—While the vanguards of the punitive expeditionary forces of Canton are in Chaoling, but 50 miles from Changsha, Hunan militarists are split on the question of their political allegiance. The majority favors the conclusion of an alliance with Dr. Sun Yat-sen at once to avoid the catastrophe but the rest including the Tuchun, Chao Heng-ti, have demonstrated pro-Northern inclinations.

A military conference was called by Tuchun Chao on Tuesday at his yamen, reports say. Of the 200-odd military officers that infest the province, 150 favored allegiance with the South-west, 14 desired to be neutral and 40 wanted to remain loyal to the Peking Government. After the conference, Chao ordered all forces to be prepared to resist the advance of the expedition at all points in Hunan.

From a Canton secret service, the government learns that Dr. Sun has received financial support from Little Hsu amounting to 2,000,000 yen. He has further issued military notes totalling $2,000,000 and is marching in two different directions against Wuchang and Hankow: one by way of Kiangsi and the other, Hunan.

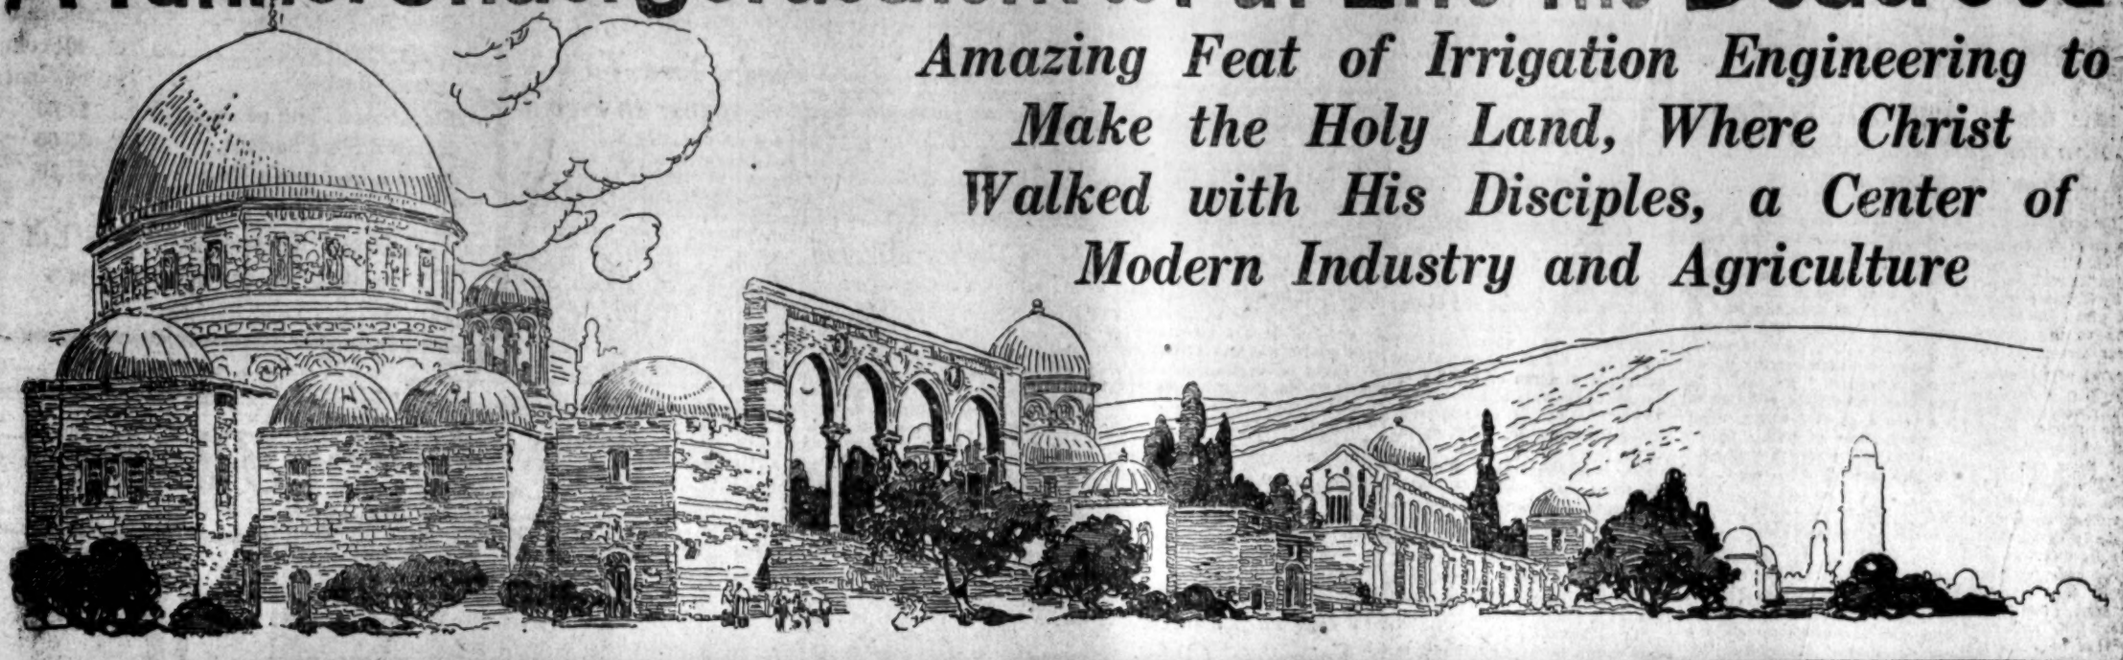
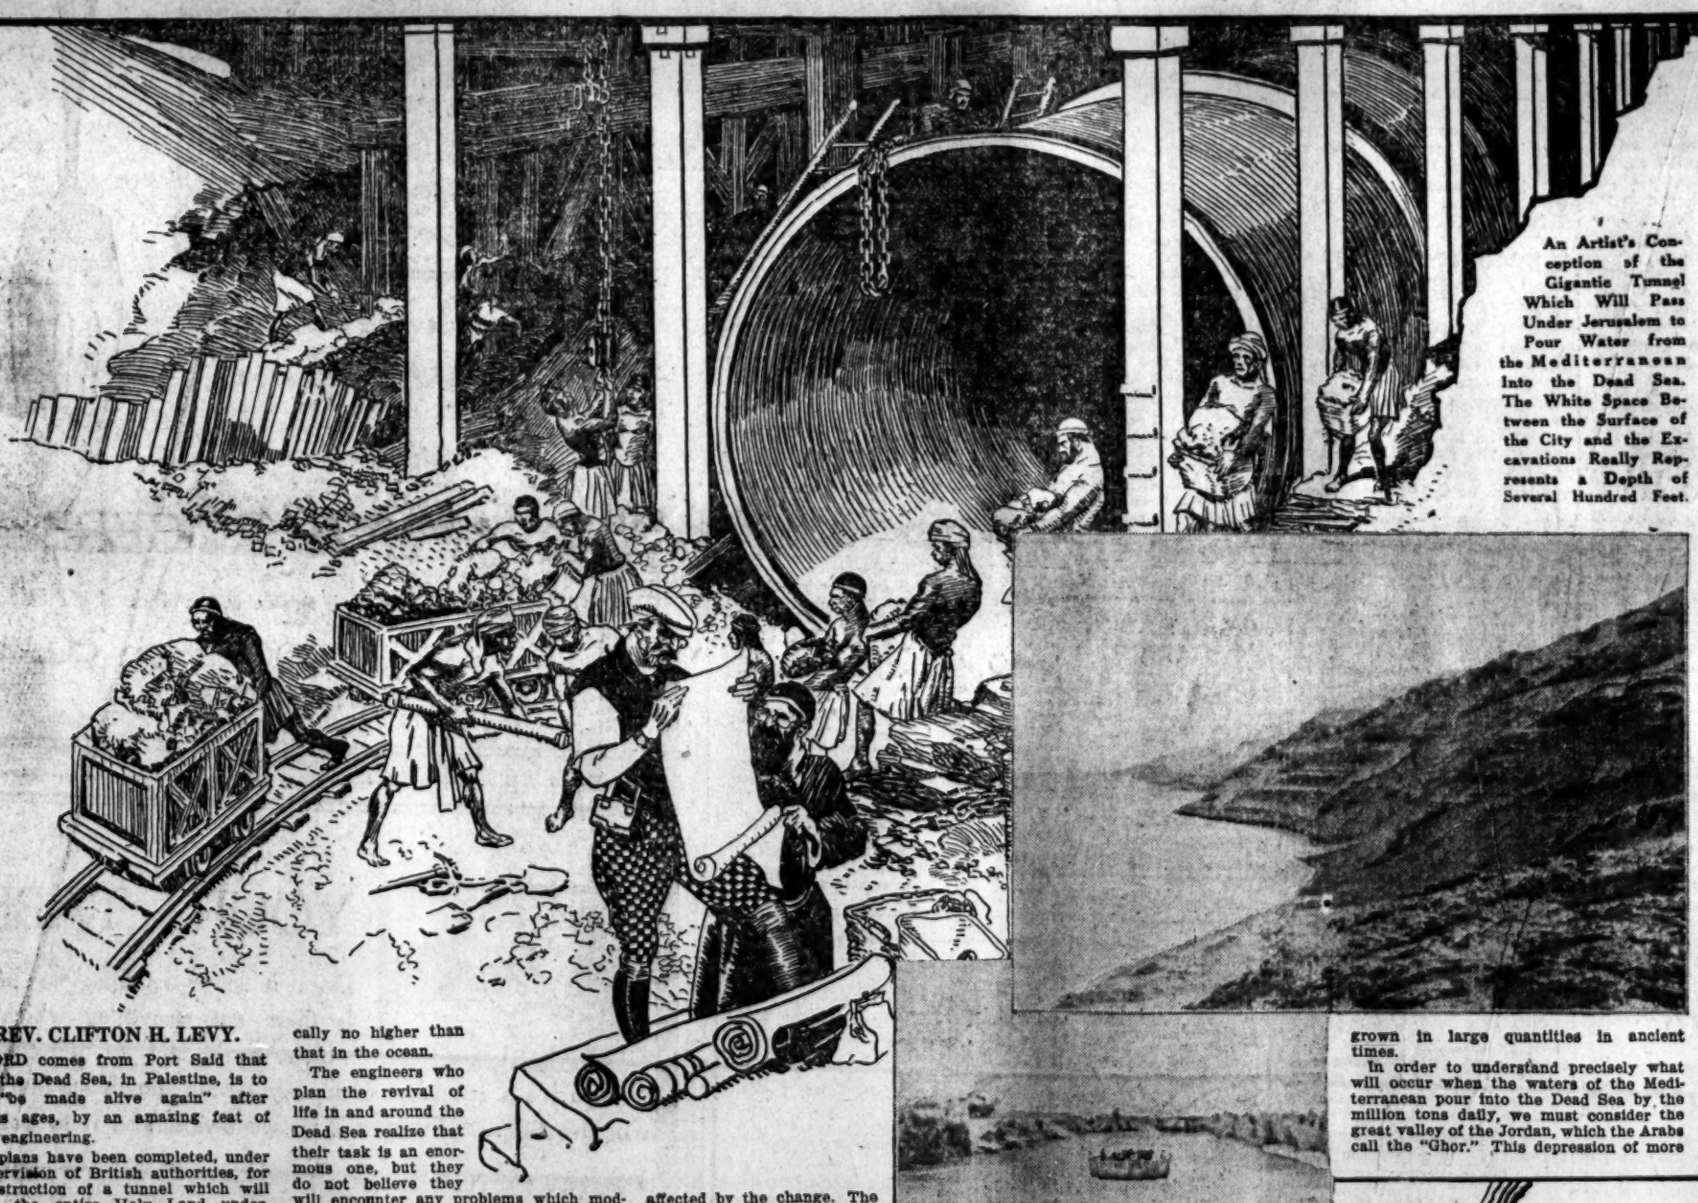
A Tunnel Under Jerusalem to Put Life Into The Dead Sea

Amazing Feat of Irrigation Engineering to Make the Holy Land, Where Christ Walked with His Disciples, a Center of Modern Industry and Agriculture





An Artist's Conception of the Gigantic Tunnel Which Will Pass Under Jerusalem to Pour Water from the Mediterranean Into the Dead Sea. The White Space Between the Surface of the City and the Excavations Really Represents a Depth of Several Hundred Feet.

Ferry Overlooking the River Jordan and Old Lake Deposits at Ed-Damieh, and, above, Shoreline of Dead Sea Looking North.

By REV. CLIFTON H. LEVY.

WORD comes from Port Said that the Dead Sea, in Palestine, is to "be made alive again" after countless ages, by an amazing feat of modern engineering.

First plans have been completed, under the supervision of British authorities, for the construction of a tunnel which will traverse the entire Holy Land underground, through which the waters of the Mediterranean will pour into the Dead Sea and bring it to life once more, as it was in ancient prehistoric times.

It is believed the project will be the means of giving life and wealth, by irrigation, to many miles of arid, desert territory. In addition, by the construction of turbines at different points along the path of the tunnel, electric power for civic and commercial uses will be furnished to the whole of Palestine.

The tunnel will run directly beneath Jerusalem, and, when it is completed, visitors may expect to see electric lights and street cars operated by its power in the Holy City.

It is a gigantic problem from the engineering point of view, for it will mean the construction of a subterranean viaduct some thirty-seven miles long, with a "fall" of more than 1,000 feet.

The Dead Sea, which is probably the greatest natural wonder on the face of the earth, lies 1,295 feet below the level of the Mediterranean Sea, and in some places is 1,300 feet deep. The River Jordan is the chief source of its water, but many smaller brooks pour into it, so that something like six million tons of water fall into it every twenty-four hours. While the water that pours into it is largely fresh, the excessive salt of its bed and surrounding cliffs is absorbed so rapidly that the water becomes 25 per cent salt, a thick, brackish solution, which prevents any breathing thing from living in it, and even destroys vegetation.

When the water from the Mediterranean pours in, the Dead Sea will spread widely out over surrounding territory, and the total volume of its water will be so great that the percentage of salt will be practically no higher than that in the ocean.

The engineers who plan the revival of life in and around the Dead Sea realize that their task is an enormous one, but they do not believe they will encounter any problems which modern machinery cannot solve. The Simplon Tunnel, which runs under the Alps between Switzerland and Italy, was dug at a very high elevation through solid rock, and had to be dug with far greater care and at greater expense than will be necessary here. The engineers will surely encounter some rock, but they believe that most of the tunneling will be "easy going."

The fall of 1,300 feet will make it possible to construct power stations, beneath ground, in which the water will fall over turbine wheels, through which enough electric power can be generated to run all the electric lighting plants, factories and railways in southern Palestine.

As the tunnel will run directly under Jerusalem itself, which lies on a line with the northern end of the Dead Sea, there will be no loss in transmitting the power to that central point.

The surface of the earth will not be disturbed at Jerusalem, nor will any of the sacred buildings or shrines be endangered, for Jerusalem is above the sea level in the Judaean mountains.

It is believed that the climate itself around the Dead Sea will be profoundly affected by the change. The evaporation of the fresher water will be more rapid, the surface of the sea will be greater when it spreads out over surrounding plains, and consequently the local rainfalls will be more abundant.

There is no danger that the spread of the Dead Sea will trend westward overflowing any of the cities or sacred places of the Holy Land. High cliffs rise westward to 4,400 feet. Other cliffs and mountains lie eastward. The waters, therefore, will "back up" toward the north along the valley of the River Jordan, and will spread out southward, covering a wide expanse of what is now sandy desert.

There will not be any danger of flooding too widely the valley of the Jordan, except at a few low-lying points, and then for a short distance only, as most of the Jordan Valley is a huge crevasse, or "fault" as the geologists call it, in which lay a narrow lake more than 200 miles long in prehistoric days.

This project promises much for the land, even north of Jerusalem, for with sufficient power and an increased rainfall, irrigation would be made easier, and in some cases would cease to be necessary. Once more the Promised Land would "flow with milk and honey," for the greatest lack of agriculturists has been water, due to the arid nature of the soil on the level lands and to the denudation of the soil on the slopes by the cutting down of the forests.

Palestine proper is usually considered to mean the land west of the River Jordan, but there is a once-fruitful table land lying east of the river, formerly the "Land of Moab," where wheat was grown in large quantities in ancient times.

In order to understand precisely what will occur when the waters of the Mediterranean pour into the Dead Sea by the million tons daily, we must consider the great valley of the Jordan, which the Arabs call the "Ghor." This depression of more than 5,000 feet, in which the Dead Sea and the Jordan River valley lie is part of a great geological "fault" extending from Antioch, in Syria, southward between the Lebanon mountains, and the range of which Mount Hermon is the summit, and onward through the Jordan valley and its continuation to the Gulf of Akaba and the Red Sea.

The earthquakes which still occur from time to time in the region of the Dead Sea are but the last shivering movements of the earth's crust which have been in progress here since the middle of the Tertiary period (long before man came on earth), and which in their total result have produced the depression. It is as if a vast block of solid rock fifty or sixty miles wide and hundreds of miles long had broken off from the main mass extending eastward, and thus had created the gaping crevasse which separates Palestine proper from the plains of Moab.

This ground is of especial interest to Bible students for it is closely connected with the story of Lot and Abraham in the Old Testament. Those who know their Book of Genesis will remember that when the herdsmen of Abraham quarrelled with those of his nephew Lot, Abraham advised that they separate and gave Lot the privilege of choosing where he would go.

Lot went to Sodom. Warned of the impending doom, he hastened to leave, warning his wife and children not to look back, but Lot's wife did look back and was turned into "a pillar of salt."

The vivid description of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, where it is said the brimstone was rained down upon these cities and that the scene was "as the smoke of a furnace," is borne out by the fact that there are still volcanoes in the neighborhood and many hot springs, showing that the inner fires are not very far from the surface.

All this happened something like forty centuries ago, for Abraham lived in 2100 B. C., and it is quite remarkable that now the very site of the destruction of two of the great cities of ancient times will be the centre of a project to bring back prosperity and agricultural wealth to the country.

The Mediterranean Sea is really an inland ocean, of enormous size, extending from the Straits of Gibraltar on the west to Asia on the east, and covering many thousand miles of surface. It can easily spare millions upon millions of tons of water, for it is not only fed by the great rivers of Europe, Asia and Africa, but is connected directly with the vast Atlantic Ocean, and consequently its waters are inexhaustible.

Silent Drama Now At Covent Garden

Lady Diana Duff-Cooper Appears In First Movie

(China Press Correspondence)

London, January 26.—"The cinema's the thing." So says Shakespeare's own London today, and nobility itself has temporarily at least given its wholehearted attention to the flickerings on the silver screen.

Society's approval of the silent drama as a form of entertainment was officially recorded last night at Covent Garden Opera House, W. C., the historic house which in former days was London's home of the opera. The occasion was the first presentations of "The Glorious Adventure" in which Lady Diana Duff-Cooper plays the leading role.

There have been many changes at Covent Carden. The crescent of boxes has gone. Moreover, smoking is permitted, and the stalls which were once so expensive are now to be obtained at very democratic prices. Yet at the premiere of the film drama there was a social brilliance and a kind of excitement in the air which carried the mind back to the old gala nights.

"The Glorious Adventure," produced in England last summer by Mr. J. Stuart Blackton, is the first picture play to be made natural colors by the Prizma process of color photography. The play itself, by Felix Orman, tells the story of a certain Lady Beatrice Fair, a beauty of the Court of Charles the Second, who goes through a marriage ceremony which she believes to be merely formal with a prisoner in gaol. But during the great fire of London, he is released and claims his bride. Lady Diana plays the part of the heroine and scores a success which in the later scenes develops into a triumph. Last night as she sat in the audience watching her own acting and sensed the enthusiasm of the spectators she must have been no little stirred by the genuineness of feeling evidenced.

"It was magnificent and far exceeded my expectations," declared Lady Diana. "Of course, I have seen the play privately before, but everything was quite different in this huge Opera House. I did not suffer from 'cinema nerves' as I had anticipated I would, and it is really very thrilling to live again through the emotions that one has portrayed on the screen."

Dr. Strauss In Concert Program

Dr. Richard Strauss, German composer, recently made his first appearance in London since the events of 1914-18 in conjunction with a concert of the London Symphony Orchestra and a recital by Miss Ethel Frank, American soprano, at Albert Hall. The hall was by no means filled for the occasion, and although there was a good deal of applause, the attitude of the audience was no more than one of decent cordiality. Dr. Strauss conducted the orchestra in three of his early works—"Don Juan," "Till Eulenspiegel," and "Death and Transfiguration."

Abbey Apparition Dazzles Priests

Priests of the Benedictine Order at the monastery attached to Belmont Abbey, two miles from Hereford, report that on Sunday, when a priest was kneeling before the high altar, an apparition in dazzling white appeared above the altar. The priest called some of his colleagues, who are also reported to have seen the apparition.

The priests themselves are divided as to the nature of the phenomena. Some insist that the apparition is not the first to be seen at the abbey. "One evening I was in the grounds closing the doors when I saw a life-sized figure of a priest, dressed in his ordinary habit," one of the priests declared. "Another time I was asleep when I was awakened by someone pasing a hand over my heart. Starting up, I recognised the visitant as the returned spirit of a dead priest."

The Right Rev. G. A. Kindersley, abbot of Belmont, was inclined to treat the matter humorously. "No sensible person believes in such psychic phenomena nowadays," he said. "If any man here tells me that he has seen a ghost I will give him a good dose of physic for indigestion and watch how he eats his next meal."

New National Host Is Named

Britain now has a new "national host." Mr. J. Conway Davies, who was appointed secretary of the government hospitality fund in 1918 and who since that time has met all the official visitors to England and made them at home, has resigned, and has been succeeded by Mr. E. E. Beare of the Inland Revenue Department. The post is no sinecure. It entails meeting every official visitor on arrival, providing him with hotel accommodations, seeing after his luggage, and in the case of foreign trade missions, arranging a program of entertainments. Mr. Davies, who is 30 and a Welshman, speaks many languages. His most difficult task was in March of last year when 300 guests, speaking 25 different languages, were in London for a Reparations Conference.

Chinese Students Out After Work

A plea for work as well as an opportunity to study is being voiced by Chinese students in England.

"We came here to work as well as to learn," said Mr. S. B. Tan, a former secretary of the London Chinese Students' Association. "Manufacturers are chary of taking us into their factories. Why should this be? In the United States and in France we are given every opportunity of combining work and study. When we go back to China we shall naturally be asked how we fared in England. Those who return from the United States will be able to tell a glowing tale."

Mr. Tan intends to return to China in the near future to raise funds for the establishment in London of a bureau to be known as "China House" to which all Chinese students coming to England will able to apply for help and information.

Earl Will Be Comedian In Spite Of Title

Gossip in London is devoting no little attention to recent events in which the Earl of Essex figured at his seat at Bodenham Manor, Herefordshire. The Bodenham villagers, it appeared, arranged a pierrot party, and the earl, a dapper little man with the face and figure of the born comedian consented to appear as star merry-maker. His appearance served to scandalise the stately homes of Herefordshire, but caustic comment left him quite unperturbed.

"I believe that some of the local gentry consider it rather infra dig." he said, "and they laugh at me even now, but our justification is the pleasure we give and receive."

The Pierrot troup is soon to lose the services of Mr. Ronnie Meak, the musical farm laborer, whose period of temporary employment at ... is over, and the earl declares he will sing the sentimental ballads himself if he can't find a suitable substitute.

Carry Your Own Fire, Scientists Now Urge Workers

The Committee of the Privy Council for Medical Research concluding an investigation of the effects of local heating and cooling of the body, have, in effect, urged that instead of a whole workshop being heated each worker should carry his own fire or heating appliance about with him.

"The investigation showed," states the committee, "that on the hands being placed as far as the wrists in water at 41 to 50 deg. C. the whole body loses as much heat as is normally produced per minute in heating condition. Similarly, when the hands are immersed in water as hot as can be comfortably borne, say 111.2 deg. F., the body gains per minte almost as much heat as it loses normally.

"Local heating of the body is thus shown to be very efficacious, and it has been urged that this may eventually be found to be the best method of distributing heat in some workshops and elsewhere, each individual having an electrical heating appliance, for instance, under his clothes and under his control, while the whole shop is freely ventilated by cool air."

Pussyfoots And Antis Are Set For Battle

Whether Central London shall be permitted to have its after-theater suppers or shall be restricted still further in its enjoyment of the night hours is the subject of a heated war between the "Pussyfooters" and the Brighter London Society. The Society, as a result of a determined campaign secured permission from licensing justices for a revival of after-theater suppers in the West End, but the "Pussyfooters" are now up in arms with the avowed purpose of securing a reversal of this decision. As a counter-move, the Society will ask a still greater loosening-up in the restrictions imposed upon London during war-time.

Among those who appear as patrons of the Society are the Bishop of Birmingham, Lieut. General Sir Alfred Codrington, Viscount Curzon, Mr. H. Gordon Selfridge, and Sir Woodman Burbridge.

Bogus Laira Gets Five Years

"Lieut.—Colonel George Hanbury Williams," "Laird of Drumblair" will have to forego his estate in Aberdeenshire for the next five years and content himself with such facilities as are offered those sentenced to penal servitude, according to a decision just handed down by the High Court, Edinburgh. "The Laird," whose real name is George Clifford Charles Williams, was convicted of a series of frauds.

The Lord Advocate, in reviewing the case for the prosecution before sentence was passed, stated that Williams was born in Highgate in 1837. In August, 1911, he obtained a commission as a second lieutenant in the Shropshire Light Infantry, which was withdrawn in the following year. In August, 1914, he was given a commission in the Middlesex Regiment under the name of George William Wilson, but was asked to resign a year later for financial reasons.

In 1920, while living in Boulogne, Williams wrote to the agents of the Drumblair estate, representing himself as Lieut.—Colonel George Hanbury Williams, with lands in England and Wales, and obtained a lease of the estate. After he took possession he obtained goods valued at £323 from local tradesmen.

Williams' counsel urged in his behalf that he had taken over the estate with the idea of making it a paying concern. Army friends had told him that if he would take a house and estate they would visit him and pay him £50 a fortnight for shooting and 15s., 6d a day for board. He had twenty-six guests during August and received from them about £700. But the guests had been dissatisfied with the shooting, and he had been obliged to hire a grouse moor, for which he paid £250 in cash.

What Is Genius? Scientists' Opinions

What is genius? Professor T. H. Pear of Manchester University expresses the opinion that "a genius is usually anything but smart" and in a mental test "may appear to be stupid."

Professor Sir Arthur Keith, the anthropologist, declares that "the human brain may be compared to a pack of 52 cards, and is capable of a very large number of combinations. One particular combination may come up at once, and then not again for a very long time. It is the same with genius."

"Have you seen a brain section under the microscope?" Sir Arthur continues. "A million spiders' webs are not in it. To find out what it is that makes a man a genius, we must go right down to atoms—further than we can reach. Research work is being done, however, and these things may be found out. I do not think that at birth a man with particular qualities in one direction is necessarily deficient in others. He may, however, devote himself very much to this one particular quality of his and neglect others, which will naturally be affected."

In Sir Arthur Keith's opinion there are two kinds of genius, which may be typified by the case of the poet and the inventor. In one case, the brain works subconsciously, as in a dream, and in the other, the exceptional quality of the brain is controlled. I do not think that the increase of education will affect the number of men of genius, but it may give people more opportunities to develop their abilities."

Ice Cream To Combat Alcohol

A chain of American soda fountains in London as a counter-attraction to alcohol is the latest plan launched by those who are endeavoring to win Britain over to the ranks of the drys. The scheme is backed by Mr. A. R. Crew of the Avondale Hotel, Belsize Park, who states that he is hoping to raise enough capital to launch a national plan for organising the supply of ice-cream and soda-fountains in connection with clubs, churches, schools, etc. He also hopes to link up the grocers, restaurant proprietors, and pleasure steamboats, and to open up ice cream and soda parlors wherever the need exists. Another feature of the plan is the provision of supplies from marquees in the parks and on the heaths around London during the week-end and the holiday season, and to set ex-soldiers to work on sales from hygienic barrows in the more crowded districts.

"I consider that such scheme would be much more constructive temperance move than any amount of legislation or platform talk," says Mr. Crew. "It is no good telling people that they must not drink alcoholic beverages. A better plan is to provide counter attractions for the young and to give them an appetite for something else. The two things that brought prohibition to America were the realisation by employers that it would be a great economic factor in world competition and the provision of counter measures on the lines I have planned."

Lady Tree To Appear In Revue

For the first time, Lady Tree is going into a revue. She will be in the cast of "Mayfair to Montmartre," which Mr. C. B. Cochran is to produce shortly at the New Oxford Theater. "I am looking forward to it immensely," says Lady Tree. "I do not consider there is anything infra dig. in it as a very great artist, Mme. Rejane, appeared in revue. As far as I know, I shall appear in three separate scenes."

British Art Seen At Royal Academy Exhibit

Winter Showing Marks Unusual Departure From Traditions

London, Jan. 20.—Following on the surprise of the summer exhibition at the Royal Academy with the departure from its official tradition, comes yet another in the winter exhibition. It has been usual at this annual show to be invited to enjoy Rembrandt and other old masters. This year the fare offered is the work of 36 R. A.'s and A. R. A.'s. It is one of the most important shows held at the Academy in recent years, for it gives an excellent idea of certain tendencies in British art from the 60s of last century until 1921. Here are to be seen many pictures which created sensations in their day, pictures which have been reproduced over and over again, mostly works of the older men bound by academic tyranny. It must be confessed that they wear better than those of the "emancipated."

FASHIONS IN SUBJECTS

All these works on which one today brings the cold light of criticism are now offered as history. And very good history they make. Everyone of them shows care and love of craftsmanship, and if one's modern dislike of them is analysed for a moment it will be seen that in almost every case it is the subject matter which repels. Subjects are more or less fashionable, and when this objection is got out of the way, we find in many of these despised works of a decade ago a knowledge of the craft of painting, which is certainly absent in the bulk of pictures produced today.

These academicians at least possessed patience, they strove to draw well, they brought all their knowledge to bear, for what must have been long periods of exacting effort, upon the problem of making a picture. Nothing was "just tossed off" as is fashionable today, and the result is that for the most part these pictures strike one, on the walls of the Academy, as possessing at least decorative quality and some measure of permanent interest.

CAUSE FOR REVALUATION

Many, of course, will not stand the scanning of the modern lover of art, but the show as a whole cannot be treated with contemptuous indulgence. The fact is that many of these painters are taking their true perspective. For instance James Sant. A royal group by him seen here will condemn him if one entirely loses patience, but dotted about here and there are the most exquisite little landscapes which were done for his own amusement. One of them, "Sunset: Isle of Wight, 1864," remains in the memery long after pretentious works have faded from it.

Again, Arthur Hacker proves that full justice has not been done to him. He brings a distinction, a subtle intellectuality to bear upon his portraits which is lacking in most of the fashionable portraitists of today. Sir Edward Poynter is represented by three extraordinary works, "Israel in Egypt," "The Visit to Aesculapius," and "The Catapult." In the first an impossible task for a painter is attempted. The eye is scattered and tired by innumerable figures and detail of the scene. But the love, the care, the deep-seated research and knowledge command at least respect if only from an antiquarian point of view. The little dramatic incidents here and there throughout the work show to what extent the painter was out to please, to amuse and make one forget oneself in the great human drama he is at paints to display. And it is all done with a technical skill of a high order.

In the "Aesculapius" his purpose, though entirely different, is none the less apparent. In this, his most important work, he seeks to charm and employs all the subtety of texture, arrangement and expression of which he is capable. The setting of the scene, a dense grove of gnarled olive trees, from which emerge architectural fentures, is most happy, and the superb painting of the figures makes one yearn for such another painter of like ability today.

The works of Edward Stott strike a deeper note than any others in the exhibition. Influenced frankly by Millet, the tender apprehension of life vestured poetically in beautiful color and subtly expressive form, Stott's pictures (15 in number) at this exhibition make the show alone worth the pilgrimage.

One of the earliest pictures, "A Spate in the Highlands," was painted in 1886 by Peter Graham. The strong, forestal composition created a new horizon for Londoners in its day and was considered "impressionistic." It was the first contribution of Graham's to the Academy and made people realise that the pupils of Scot Lauder were a force to reckon with. The fine self-portrait by William Strang purchased by the Chantrey Bequest this year, is here seen with other examples of his work, the most triumphant being the portrait of Lucien Pissarro.

Several drawings of the architecture of Norman Shaw are shown and the sculpture of Onslow Ford, Harry Bates and W. K. Colton are but meagerly represented by works on a small scale. It is a great pity that the works of individual artists are not grouped together instead of scattered as they are about the exhibition, although the extreme care with which the exhibition is hung is apparent and audable, and distinctly adds to the pleasure derived from it.

The Pagoda In China

One More Exemplification Of The Universal Desire Of Mankind In All Ages To Erect Towers To Symbolize Their Aspirations

In every age and in all countries men have raised towers pointing upward toward the sky to symbolise, in however vague a manner, their aspirations. These towers imply spiritual uplift, a yearning toward the ideal; they were never dwelling houses like our modern skyscrapers. They were built on hilltops in commanding situations and were supposed to spread their protection—the beneficence of heaven, over the surrounding country. In Persia, India and Burma they assumed characteristic forms. In the jungles of Cambodia and Java such pagodas are found hidden away in remote places, left there by a remote civilisation, lost and forgotten. But we can go further back yet to the earliest civilisations of Assyria and Babylon. The story of the Tower of Babel is the story of the building of such a tower not for religious purposes, as designed, but out of pride and arrogance.

The architecture of the pagoda, or dagoba—the word is probably derived from the Persian—has varied with the age and the nation. The squat pyramidal towers of Hindu India, the bell-shaped pagodas of Burma and Siam, and the columnar towers of the Moghuls both in Central Asia and in India may be cited; no less characteristic were the square towers of Babylon with their slanting tiers of steps, leading from terrace to terrace. Some have been monstrous, others beautiful, depending chiefly on the idea of lift, if one may so express it; a definite rising up of weight, supported below and decreasing toward the apex till the vanishing point is reached. This idea of lift of course implies something to be lifted, as well as some means of raising or lifting it; and so the beauty or ungainliness of such a tower depends in large measure on the sense of proportion—on a balance between the weight to be lifted up heavenward and the means at the disposal of the builder for lifting it. In other words, a correct proportion between the base and the height of the tower, and a good design of ornamentation, which shall not detract from the idea of uplift. This is all beautifully exemplified in the ancient pagodas of Pagan, on the banks of the Irrawaddy, built certainly more than 1,000 years ago.

In China these heaven-aspiring towers took a very definite form, and the Chinese pagoda is familiar to every one. Indeed nothing is more typical of the country in popular romance than these slender many-storied fingers pointing to the sky, though few of them are very ancient, as things go in China.

Let us look at the structure, meaning, and situation of these celestial towers a little more closely. Although the idea probably came from outside, from Persia perhaps, the peculiar architecture is distinctively Chinese. The origin of the word "pagoda" is not known; the Chinese call them t'a, though the word for tower is lo—as used for example in drum-tower and bell-tower. But the "t'a" is a religious edifice. Every big city has at least one, often several, some inside the city wall, others outside. Perhaps it is more common to find them outside, on a hill at the entrance to a valley, or overlooking the plain. They are the city guardians, and shed a benign influence over the district, to which end their position is carefully chosen by geomancers, in accordance with the feng-shui. This feng-shui—literally wind-water which may be translated luck—is a tyrant in China. Nothing can be done without consulting the geomancers, who are versed in the intricacies of feng-shui.

As regards structure, it may be remarked that the number of stories is always uneven—five, seven, or at most 13. There are not many pagodas with as many as 13 stories, though Yunnanfu furnishes a fine example. Five and seven-storied pagodas are more common, but there seem to be none of 11 stories.

Mostly they are solid towers of brick, but occasionally they are hollow, with a spiral stairway inside, up which one may ascend. There is, or was, such a pagoda not far from Shanghai, but it was in such a precarious state of preservation that few ventured to ascend it. In plan they are octagonal, or hexagonal, or circular—only the very small solid ones of a few stories—or more or less square. Each story is provided with windows—one to each face, and a roof, from the corners of which dangle iron bells. Thus in the case of a hexagonal pagoda, there would be six windows and six bells at each story; but there are no bells left on any of the pagodas nowadays. Often the summit is crowned by a roof, with the angles upturned in the peculiar Chinese style. One noticeable thing is that even in the highest pagoda there is very little tapering; the base is scarcely larger than the topmost story.

Like other buildings in China, temples, yamens, and city walls, the pagodas are in a sad state of disrepair; it says a good deal for the original builders that so many of them have stood the ravages of time to this day. No one ever repairs a pagoda, for no merit is acquired thus, and it were better to spend the money on building a new one. But no one does that either, because the religious enthusiasm of the Chinese has died away. Yet once the people who built these temples and towers—and built them well, must have had faith, as they certainly had artistic taste.

There must be pagodas in China several centuries old; perhaps none has been built within the last century, but there are many hundreds of them all over the country. Amongst some of the more famuos are the "flowery pagoda" and the "five-storied pagoda" at Canton—this last is built of timber; the 13-storied pagoda of Yunnan-fu; and the Foochow pagoda. But the most wonderful of all was the celebrated porcelain pagoda of Nanking. This wonderful building, which was 13 stories high and covered outside with glazed tiles, was totally destroyed by the rebels during the Taiping rebellion which laid waste the whole of central and eastern China. The loss was irreparable, and one of the most beautiful buildings in China was lost to the world, most of the city being razed to the ground at the same time. It is not to be supposed that pagodas are built in connection with temples. As a rule they stand quite apart, though occasionally they are in juxtaposition, especially in crowded cities like Canton, more from necessity than choice.

Henry Ford Economics As Cure For Evils That Beset Mankind Critically Examined

(Following is an analytical criticism of an article on money which appeared in Henry Ford's "Dearborn Independent" on January 28. Mr. Woodlock has discussed the article paragraph by paragraph from the standpoint of orthodox economics. In a note accompanying the article, it was pointed out that "Ford (having abolished the Jewish race!) is now preparing to lead the American people from the bondage of the banks into the land of promise flowing with milk, honey and cheap money!" Mr. Woodlock is former newspaper editor and is author of "The Anatomy of a Railroad Report."")

BY THOMAS WOODLOCK

"What is money? Money is the accepted medium of exchange in any political unit exercising complete national power."

Correct, but incomplete; money is also measure of price.

The important word in the above definition is the word "accepted." That a thing shall function as money it must be acceptable.

"Of what is it made? It is immaterial. The decree of government that gold or silver properly certified shall be a legal tender makes metal money. Similar certification of any other material or thing of value would have the same effect."

The third sentence of this paragraph is absolutely untrue and contains the fundamental fallacy of all "cheap money" theories. It is not the government stamp of "legal tender" quality that makes gold coin money; it is the fact that all people everywhere (in the civilised world) at all times desire gold that makes gold money. It is always accepted and always acceptable. The government stamp merely certifies weight and fineness — which weight and fineness give the value to the coin. That this is true is evident from the fact that gold coins of various countries exchange freely on the basis of weight and fineness. Value is intrinsic in the metal and is not given by the stamp.

CONCEDES THE POINT

The last sentence of the paragraph virtually concedes this point by inserting the world "of value" and thus nullifies the third sentence. If the "decree of government" makes metal money then the "value" of the "metal" has nothing to do with it; if the "value" of the thing of which "money" is made has anything to do with it, then the "decree of government" has nothing to do with it. There is no middle course.

"Is not the metal of final redemption in America gold? Yes and no."

It is. Gold is the ultimate real money of the civilised world, and all other forms are implicitly or explicitly representative money which function fully as money only so long as they are truly representative; i. e., only as long as they can in fact, if desired, be exchanged into gold at their face value.

A dollar is 23.22 grains of fine gold and it is nothing else.

"The unit of value is the gold dollar, but gold dollars are no longer coined and all the forms of money in use are not specifically redeemable in gold. For instance, the silver dollar is the only dollar issued that is not a mere promise to pay. It is legal tender, although carrying a smaller proportion of metal at market value of bullion than would make it equal to gold."

Gold pieces of five, ten, and twenty dollars are coined; it is mere sophistry to say that "gold dollars" are not coined.

EXCHANGEABLE FOR GOLD

It is true that "all the forms of money in use are not specifically redeemable in gold," but it is also true that the only reason they function as money is because they are in fact exchangeable for gold. Not one of them would be accepted at its face value if there were any doubt as to this exchangeability.

The silver dollar circulates at par because people know that the government is coining no more of them than can in fact be exchanged at par for gold. If the United States Treasury were to decline to accept silver dollars —or silver certificates—and give gold for them, the silver dollars or silver certificates would no longer circulate at their face value, that is, they would no longer function properly as money.

Any one who remembers the 1893 panic knows that.

"Yet it is a dollar and its own redemption."

Absolutely untrue. It is a "dollar" only so long as it can in fact be exchanged for a real dollar; that is, a gold dollar.

"Silver coins of other nations carrying a greater metal content than our silver dollar are worth less in the United States."

VALUE OF SILVER

No silver coin of any other country is worth more than the value of its silver content unless it is in fact exchangeable in its own country for gold at its face value. If it is, it is worth that gold face value less the expense of shipping it home.

"Why is gold selected as the unit of value? On the fallacious reasoning that such a unit is needed."

Gold was "selected" as the unit of value because it was and is the one convenient available substance which all people, always, everywhere in the civilised world, will accept. That is the fundamental fact of the "money question," and as long as it remains a fact there is no need to inquire into the whys or wherefores of it. As long as it is a fact people will continue to measure everything else in gold.

"Could the government make anything but gold the unit of value. Certainly. Prior to the demonetisation of silver that metal was a unit of value."

Certainly not. Silver was "demonetised" because it ceased to be fully acceptable as money. It ceased to be fully acceptable because its value in terms of gold was decreasing and every one knew it. Consequently it ceased to be money because doubt arose that it could be exchanged for gold at its face value.

PANIC OF 1893

Any one who remembers the panic of 1893 knows that.

"Is not gold a universal money; that is, does not a gold dollar of the United States pass current in foreign countries? No gold coins of any nation are estimated at bullion value elsewhere than in the country of issue."

There is no "universal money" in the shape of "universal coined money." But the universality of gold as money material is proved by the very fact mentioned, viz. that gold coin of one country is valued in another country at its bullion content, whereas silver coin of one country is valued in another country at its face value in gold, less shipping charges provided that in its home country it can in fact be exchangd for gold at that face value.

A full weight British sovereign is today worth $4.86 at New York, although a £5 Bank of England note is worth only $21—or at the rate of $4.20 for the pound. The reason is that in fact the banknote cannot be exchanged for its face value in gold sovereigns.

"Has gold ever been demonetised? In the 50's the Netherlands Belgium and Germany demonetised gold and made silver the sole unit of value, or money base, in their respective jurisdictions. Why was this done? The discovery of free gold in California and Australia led to the fear on the part of holders of money credits that the increase of the world's supply of gold would render the metal so cheap as to depreciate its money value."

If the "decree of government that gold or silver, properly certified shall be a legal tender makes metal money," why should these governments have taken fright (prematurely) over the possible increase in the supply of gold?

FOLLOWED EXAMPLE

Why did not other countries follow their example? And why did those countries retrace their steps?

Because gold continued to be the one universally acceptable substance, and silver lost the acceptability it had enjoyed.

"Has paper money ever been at a premium over gold? Yes."

No. Never has paper money been worth a premium over gold in any real sense. Whenever this has occurred—as during the late war, where export of gold was forbidden and United States notes, which could be shipped by mail, were more desirable than gold, which could not—it has been by reason of purely temporary conditions physically interfering with the movement of coin.

"Has there ever been another instance of the kind? The Governor of the Island of Guernsey, in the English Channel, refused in 1847 to sanction the borrowing of money to build a market house, but financed the enterprise on the strength of the credit of the island by issuing scrip that was made receivable in taxes and market rentals. The project was successful and demand for the scrip finally exceeded the supply, so it rose to a premium over the ordinary coin of the realm—gold and silver. To remedy this it was decreed that market rentals might be paid in the ordinary currency. When the scrip was retired the market house had paid for itself and the island had its improvement without the payment of a farthing to the money lenders."

Utter nonsense! In the first place, the "scrip" was not "money" at all, but a form of investment entitling one to the services of the market house. As long as the right to these services was exclusively in the scrip, the scrip sold at a premium; as soon as the exclusive privilege was withdrawn the premium disappeared.

INTEREST BEARING BONDS

In the second place, suppose that the Governor had issued interest bearing bonds for the house, the cash rentals would have paid the interest and the sinking fund necessary to pay off the bonds. The community would have been no more out of pocket for "interest" in this case than it was under the scrip arrangement.

"How are price fluctuations to be accounted for? A prime cause of the changes in the level of prices as agreed by all economists is the expansion and contraction of the volume of money in circulation. If the volume of money increases more rapidly than the volume of goods prices naturally become higher; if it does not increase or is diminished the trend is to lower price levels for commodities. Naturally the money lenders fear expansion and favor contraction."

Who are the "money lenders" who are hurt by currency inflation and inflated prices? They comprise every one who has a savings bank account, every one who has a "stocking," every one who has a deposit account in a commercial bank, every one who has mortgage investment, everyone who has a government, state, municipal, railroad or industrial bond or a preferred stock of every kind and every one who has a life insurance policy. These are the real "money lenders." whose "money" is lent for them by banks and bankers, whose "money" is depreciated by currency inflation, and whose property is in effect stolen from them by this process.

CURRENCY INFLATION

Who gets the stolen property? Who is benefited by currency inflation?

Germany furnishes the answer There the entire middle class has been ruined. Workmen are worse off than before the war. Farmers are no better off, for the higher prices they get for their produce will buy them no more of the things they need than in prewar days and their "savings" have been wiped out by the fall in currency value. A small class of speculators have benefited. Debtors have also been able to defraud their creditors by paying in depreciated money. Is this a desirable thing? If so, would it not be better to cancel all debt by law and avoid the other troubles? It certainly would be more honest.

"What is the effect of hoarding money? To reduce its volume. Bankers hoard money for the same reasons that monopolies restrict production—to be able to secure greater profits on their stock in trade."

FALSE REASONING

More falsehood could not be packed into less space. The only source of profit to "banks" is interest on the money they lend. When their "reserves" are highest—presumably "hoards" means reserves—interest rates are lowest; when reserves are lowest interest rates are highest. From a profit-making viewpoint the more loans a bank can make and the less cash it holds in reserve the better. The one thing a bank does not want to do is to "hoard" money, for it makes no profit on the "money" it hoards—only on the "money" it sets to work.

"What is the effect of this course on industry ? It places business and production on a credit basis, so compelling the producer to finance his business with borrowed money and the consumer to supply his needs in the same way. This adds to the taxes of each for the privilege of existence."

In the first place "this course" exist.

In the second place the "credit basis"—by which presumably the entire process of commercial banking is meant—is in effect merely the accounting of the industrial and commercial processes by which the commodities used by the community are manufactured, transported, distributed and consumed. A manufacturer borrows to buy raw material for his mills; the jobber who buys his product borrows to buy from the manufacturer; who then repays this loan; the retailer borrows to buy from the jobber, who then repays his loan; the ultimate consumer buys from the retailer on a monthly "charge account," and when he receives his pay at the end of the month he pays his account and the retailer pays off his loan.

INTEREST NOT TAX

Under what system (outside a madhouse) should a manufacturer be able to get raw material for which he cannot pay cash on the nail, a jobber get products for which he cannot pay cash on the nail and a retailer get goods for which he cannot pay cash on the nail—save on such a system as this? The interest he pays is not a "tax," it is a proper price for the use of some one else's property, out of which use he makes a profit.

"To borrow money one must give adequate security. What is adequate security? The security for all loans rests on land and labor in the last analysis."

Bosh! "Adequate security" (except for security-collateral and mortgage loans) is essentially personal. A man's credit is measured by the estimation of his ability and intention to pay. Whose estimation? That of the person whose money he seeks to borrow. That is the person who

Chemical Plants Are Biggest War Hazard, Says Robertson

British Military Leader Asserts Mere Agreements Will Not Remove Danger Of Them And Urges Some Sort Of Control

BY WARRE B. WELLS

WITH the exception of the airplane, the introduction of poisonous gases has worked a greater revolution in the conduct of warlike operations than has any invention since the advent of gunpowder."

"Unless and until some control is exercised over the activities of chemical factories—which are really arsenals in disguise—prohibitions, resolution and similar pious aspirations for abolishing chemical warfare will be not only futile but dangerous, in that they will lull the nation into a feeling of security for which there is no sufficient justification."

These are two sentences from an article striking a grave note of warning published by Sir William Robertson, who during most of the World War was chief of the Imperial General Staff and afterward in command of the army on the Rhine. Robertson, whose military life story was told in his recent book, "From Private to Field Marshal," rose from the ranks of the British army to its supreme command, and what he doesn't know about warfare isn't worth knowing.

He pays a tribute to the "characteristic acumen" with which the United States has grasped the new situation by starting in 1920 a separate chemical warfare service and later increasing the annual allotment of money for this service. Whether this service will now disappear, due to the resolution of the Washington conference barring the use of poisonous gases, remains to be seen, he says; but he clearly is of opinion that it ought not to be scrapped yet anyway.

Over here, in his view, military authorities have done little to assign to chemical warfare that position in British war policy which it merits. They still are thinking of war in terms of rifles, guns and men, much as it was thought of eight years ago. But modern war, as Robertson sees it, might almost as well be thought of in terms of bows and arrows and catapults.

Due to the fact that the American troops, unlike the British, were exposed to gas attacks from the day they entered the theater of operations in France, he regards their casualties as a better guide than the British. He notes the figures, given on the authority of an American officer that out of a total of 275,000 American causalties 75,000 were caused by gas, and takes the so-called "mustard gas," against which no adequate protection was found, as the most striking example of what may be expected in the future.

Robertson indorses the warning of the author of "The Riddle of the Rhine," who is an expert on the subject and had practical experience of it in the war, that we may one day see chemical products used in such a manner that whole armies of men will lose their equilibrium, becoming "less mobile than a colony of cripples" and incapable of "advancing in a fixed direction, of obeying orders or of anything more than a sort of drunken movement."

The coming of chemical warfare revolutionised the whole field of strategy and tactics. Obstacles, both natural and artificial, have always been in the hands of a skillful commander useful aids both in attack and defence. But now by using some persistent chemical substance a commander can, with a relatively small personnel, block out such areas in the tactical sphere as he may wish, giving them the same value as a natural obstacle, such as a river or as a laboriously intrenched position strongly held by infantry and guns. There were, in fact, Robertson notes, some examples of these gas obstacles on the French front in 1918.

Again, the use of chemical compounds in airplane bombs opens up a wide, new field of action. If bombs containing a really harmful substance were used the whole life and business of a raided city might be dislocated for a week or more and all the inhabitants be driven from their homes. Similarly by the use of the right sort of poisonous gases, the whole area of strategic points in rear of the field armies, such as great railway centers, could be made impossible for days together.

Chemical warfare, Robertson points out, is very cheap, and can be prepared in absolute secrecy. It entails virtually no expenditure in peace time, either initial or recurring, and is, in fact, an ideal example of the excellent principle of waging war by the mobilisation of peace industries. A chemical factory, such as a dye factory, can be switched off from its ordinary peace work at a moment's notice and turned on to the production of poisonous gases required for war.

"It follows," says Robertson, "that the country best equipped with factories and personnel of this kind will also be the best equipped for war, and will, if and when war occurs, naturaly be the least likely to forego the great advantages it possesses. How this equipment is at present apportioned can be estimated from the fact that in 1918 Germany's productive capacity of synthetic dyestuffs approached double the capacity of all other countries of the world put together. This huge preponderance may be somewhat less now, but not much."

A security against the use of poisonous gases which depends merely upon a paper guaranty, and which leaves available ample means for their rapid mass production, is no security at all in the view of the ex-Chief of Staff. Neither the Washington nor the Versailles resolutions are of any real utility unless steps are taken to enforce them.

But what steps? Robertson recognises that the manufacture of chemicals—a harmless and essential peace industry—cannot possibly be prohibited like the building of submarines. The only way, in his view, and this would be effective only to a limited extent, is to reduce and restrict the productive capacity of the various chemical factories to the peace time requirements of their respective countries, plus an appropriate share of the trade of the outside world.

This he admits to be a "tremendous proposition," and he says nothing about its feasibility, which is none of his business as a soldier. He is concerned only to shatter the comfortable belief that "pious aspirations" for abolishing chemical warfare are enough to remove its real danger.

The Pneumonia Month.

March is a typical pneumonia month and usually gives a high rate of mortality for the disease. After a long and hard winter, the system loses much of its resistance and people grow careless. When every cold, no matter how slight, is given prompt and intelligent attention, there is much less danger of pneumonia. It should be borne in mind that pneumonia is a germ disease and breeds in the throat. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is an expectorant and cleans out the germ ladened mucus and not only cures a cold but prevents its resulting in pneumonia. It is pleasant to take. Children take it willingly.

Economics Cure For Evils That Beset Mankind

makes the "last analysis," and rightly so—especially when he is lending some one else's money for which he is trustee.

Is it contended that every man should be the sole judge of his own credit? That he has a right to use other people's money when and as much as he pleases? If so, why not say so?

"Could that security be utilised in the solution of the 'Money Problem'? One school of economists says it could. The theory is that the government itself could issue money without the intervention of fiscal agents basing it on the faith and credit of the nation and limited only by the taxable values of the land. This, it claims, is the real basis of money, whatever its nature. But control of the volume of money in circulation has since the organisation of the United States Bank in 1816 (the bank fought by President Jackson) been delegated to fiscal agents who have administered the toast for their private profit."

FRENCH TRIED SCHEME

The French government tried this scheme in the days of the Revolution. Almost every one knows what happened to the "assignats" thus issued. Those who don't, can form a good idea by looking at the Russian ruble today. And the French government of that day, having confiscated the choice lands of the nobles, had better "land security" behind the "assignats" than any government has since or will have.

And how should government "issue" money—to whom and for what? By what process would it put it into "circulation?"

How would some one who did not directly work for the government get some of this "money" into his hands?

Is there to be a periodical "free distribution?"

"Has no attempt been made to remedy this situation? Yes. The national bank act of the Civil War period was intended to supply a legal tender currency of sufficient volume and so distributed as to supply local needs. They were given the right to issue "money" based on the deposit of government bonds. Other banks of issue were driven out of business by the levy of a prohibitive tax of 10 percent on their circulation, leaving the national banks a monopoly in this field."

"LEGAL TENDER"

The national bank act was not intended to supply a "legal tender currency." The proof of this is that the banknotes issued under this act were not and are not "legal tender" money!

"With what result? The volume of money in circulation was restricted to the limit necessary to maintain high interest rates. Few, if any, banks approached the limit of their authorised circulation, excusing their delinquency by claiming the demand did not warrant it."

The fact is that interest rates were not "high." In the middle and late '90's interest rates in the United Staes and in the civilised world generally fell to a lower level than ever before recorded in history—and this after the "demonetisation" of silver.

What kind of history is this man writing?

"How about the Federal Reserve system? The Federal Reserve system is a modification of the plan presented by Senator Aldrich for a Federal reserve association in which the money issuing power was to be centralised in one great bank owned and operated by the 'money trust.' This plan was evolved by an international banking house in Wall Street. The Federal Reserve system established regional banks, broadening the power of issue to include, in addition to government bonds, other public and commercial obligations as a base. It is capitalised by national and state bank each of which could demand a sufficient volume of notes made a legal tender by the government, for local needs on deposit of approved securities."

Neither Federal Reserve notes nor Federal Reserve Bank notes are "legal tender" currency!

"But the mandatory provisions of the law were nullified by the Federal Reserve Board by the exaction of prohibitive rediscount rates. Not only was this restriction effected, but an arbitrary retirement of notes issued was decided on, and it is due to this that there is a 'money shortage' today."

DISCOUNT RATES LOWER

So completely was the act "nullified" by the exaction of "prohibitive rediscount rates" that there were put into circulation in five years something over $30 per capita in Federal Reserve notes, and "rediscount rates" were always from 1 to 2 percent below the ruling market rates!

How was the "arbitrary retirement" of notes effected? And how is it that with the diminution of Federal Reserve notes in circulation (compared with a year ago) interest rates are much lower than they were when the maximum circulation was outstanding?

The answer is that the notes naturally came for retirement because the interest rates showed that they were not needed. Instead of a "money shortage" there is a "money surplus," which is why all sound investments have risen so much in price in the last nine months!

"What can be done to remedy this situation? Several plans are advanced, but none can succeed unless backed by public opinion. There is practical unanimity on one point—that the delegation of power to fiscal institutions must cease. The government, without the indorsement of which no currency can be made a legal tender, must reclaim that authority and exercise it."

Bruce Hopper Takes Us Through "China's Back Door"

(Bruce Hopper, a member of THE CHINA PRESS staff is one of the few confessed followers of the code of vagabondia who have come to the China Coast through "China's back door." In the Spring of 1920, Mr. Hopper and a companion, both students at Oxford, heard the call of the open road and heeded. Nearly a year later they found themselves in Burma, and conceived and executed the plan of coming to China by walking over the Himalayas. After skirting Thibet, they reached the upper waters of the Yangtsze, whose rapids they navigated in a small boat. They then struck North through Szechuen and the Lolo Country to the Ya River, down the Min and back to the Yangtsze. In a series of articles which he has prepared for the SUNDAY CHINA PRESS, Mr. Hooper records in intimate style this venturesome journey. The first of these articles appears below. The second will be published next Sunday.)

By Bruce Hopper

A song without notes, a painting without pigment, or a tale without personalities—any of these might qualify as the last shriek in Cubo-Futoism, as something formless, mirthless, soulless, and devoid of human appeal.

Lest the reader weary of a mere travelog parade I will early introduce the personalities who flit across the background of this tale. And, lest he be inclined to judge with premature harshness our flight from the serious matters of life, I will first sketch the scene, and name the substance, which inspired our irresponsibility.

Had we been responsible there would be no tale to tell. Just why we traveled is a secret. We don't know the answer. Many people asked us, "Why, to what end, and how can you do it?" It's still a mystery to us.

We were not confessed lovers of solitude. As far as memory serves we never sought the desert waste to commune with our souls, the Great Soul, or any of the attractive, lonely souls known to wander about the sands. But we did frequent the deserts. And for that matter we passed through more or less than a million picture galleries, in more or less of a hurry to get back in time for lunch. Yet had any one accused us of a sight-seeing mania, under the direction of Mr. Baedecker, we would have been loftily indignant. An argument would surely have transpired. And certainly we would have hurled an ultimatum, of sorts.

THE GOD OF VAGABONDIA

Let us say, then, we followed the impulse of the little god without a name, the god who guides the steps, and commands the thoughts, of vagabonds. He is a smiling despot, demanding constant tribute, but granting much to those who are enthralled under his scepter. His whim leads the vagobond along the highways of caravans to oases of exquisite pleasure, where the water is cool, and the shade refreshing. But for us he did more. He allowed us to blaze new trails, to tread unbroken paths to the far, twilight lands of fairy tale. Like bloodhounds on the scent of the unknown we followed him in the full cry of romantic discovery. We worshipped the smiling god of vagabondia.

More often than not serious undertakings in the lives of ordinary people emerge from trifling events. Gus, an Herodotus of hyperbole and classic metaphor, was chosen by the care-free god to spread the gospel of the open road. A don at Oxford (he couldn't remember who) had told him that Horace, or some other Augustan of Epicurean persuasion (he forgot the other's name) had raved in purple hexameters about the elixir hidden in old Falernian wine. That was the confidential trifle which arrested our stars in their courses, and sent them off on a different tack.

It became imperative that we rush down to Italy for the spring vacation, 1920. Friends invited us elsewhere. We assured them we wanted to taste the Falernian substance under the same sky that Horace did, and thus test the accuracy of his opinions. After that service to the state we were to return.

THE DILIGENT DUO

Our respective tutors admonished us to be diligent during the vacation. The tomes of twenty authors and historians were given us to masticate, mentally. Up for the "don rag" we assumed expressions of virtue almost unnatural. We wrinkled our brows to gain the fine effect of midnight pursuit of the ever-fleeting symptoms of knowledge. And, to complete our hypocrisy, we mentioned a belief that the vacation was to be a period of fruitful research never before identified with scholarship.

Alas for the boasted zest, and black for the never-to-be-acquired learning! High resolve is often tempered by weakness of the spirit; and lofty determination is adulterated by a low taste for knick-knacks. This was one of those unfortunate occasions.

We were twilighting in Naples, in the sweet, seductive gloaming of old Italian romance. We boarded the stalwart funicular to mount the hill to Castle St. Elmo, that loose mass of battlements built by Robert the Wise, in the 14th century, to command the city. It is the ceiling of Naples. Upon reaching the fortress we turned our steps to one of the terraced restaurants which hang from the cliff like swallow nests. There we received our first shock.

Across the famous gulf lay the island of Capri, as steep, bold, independent as when it sheltered Garibaldi. The harbor was a glimmering red sheen, darkened here and there by the funnels and masts of Mediterranean shipping. But the commanding bulk to the eye was the living Vesuvius, curling lazy smoke-rings, and lording in patriarchal contentment over the villages on its slopes.

FALERNIAN GLORY

This was the setting of our introduction to Falerno. We watched the great city. All looked so still, and yet we could hear the barking of dogs, the clanging of trams, the cracking of cab whips. And above all was that indescribable hum, heard only at night, and recognised as the stir and murmur of humanity in the habitations of man.

The human cry which came up from the city, the splendor and wonder of the volcano, and the teasing fragrance of the acacias everywhere—these were the powers working havoc with our senses. Already wrecked emotionally we ordered the blushful Falernian. It was uncorked with much unction and sacred rite. Each of us held his glass toward the light, and saw it was dark, translucent red, and rich in tone like the rose window of a Gothic cathedral.

At that moment the musicians struck up "Santa Lucia." Violin, mandolin and guitar, they walked among the tables, they sang love songs of the burning south, and water songs of Napoli. They loved to sing.

After that we felt thick in the throat. It was an emotional crisis we had not expected. We tasted the Horation nectar and then shook hands across the macaroni. It was pleasing and mellow, more soothing than the velvety Lacrima Cristi. One taste invited another. Each lingering swallow suggested a fresh reason why Horace was a famous man.

THE WONDER-ITCH

The classic Falernians sipped of the liquid glory, and straightaway fell to generating eclogues, pastorals, satires, and other tributes to the Muse. Ah, had we but lived in that golden age! Diversity of effect, doubtlessly due to evolution of the Falernian species, dictated that the substance should not go to our heads, but to our otherwise respectable feet.

We simply went mad. We felt a tingling in the toes, a wanderitch, a flaming gypsy-lust to gallop over the hill and see what makes the sun rise in the morning. Scholastic honors, ambitions, all the common sense cravings of which the spirit of mortal is proud, faded from the horizon. We saw only the colors of an imaginary sky beyond the bend. We heard only the siren-god calling us down (or was it up?) the highways of the world. And his voice was sweet, like the chime of a silver bell.

Strong-minded men, blessed with elaborate information about their mission in the cosmos, would resist the alluring call. There is no temptation irresistible enough to move the immovable will of a serious man. But ordinary vagabonds are weak. They shrug, pay the price, and follow the smiling god.

Oxford seemed far away. The road was open, and calling. In Gus the wear and tear of emotion demanded some expression which would be permanent. His voice was unsteady, but he reached across the cheese, saying: "This is wonderful. Let's take a trip around the world!" I was overcome, but pledged agreement.

Then we ordered more Falerno.

We played truant, and were condemned as lost to the nobler instincts of learning. We sold the vacation literature. We started the Falernian excursion, and fifteen months later arrived in Shanghai.

The fag-end of the gypsy life was a walking tour over the back fence into China, with shooting the rapids of the far reaches of the Yangtsze thrown for additional excitement. This last constitutes the fabric of the wonder-tale to follow.

To meet the demand for an "Express Service" for Oriental shipments Vancouver and Canadian and United States Points, the Canadian Pacific Railway has recently been giving special attention to the creation of a fast freight service in connection with its trans-Pacific steamers. Every detail likely to hamper the quick movement of freight has been closely supervised, and all departments are working together to supply present day requirements. That those efforts are meeting with success can best be judged by the fact that ordinary Oriental shipments are being regularly delivered at their destination in the following times from the ship's arrival in Vancouver:

Calgary	3 days.
Winnipeg	5 days
Quebec and Ontario Points	12 days
Chicago & St. Paul	11 days
New York & Boston	14 days

No alteration is being made in the fast schedule of the famous Canadian Pacific silk train. In this connection it is interesting to note that for over a year now the Empress of Russia and Empress of Asia have never failed to arrive in Vancouver on their schedule date. With the addition of the Empress of Canada and Empress of Australia within the next few months, there will be a regularly fortnightly service.

Sophia Fedorchenko served during the war as a nurse with the Russian army. At camps, on railway-trains, in hospitals, she overheard a vast amount of sayings, songs, fairy tales, and ingenuous observations exchanged by simple soldiers. Here are a few of the fairy tales, translated from "Sovremennyia Zapiski." The translator has attempted to preserve as much of the original flavor as was compatile with intelligibility, and in his task he has been greatly assistsed by Mr. William Garrett.

Alexander Kaun.

The Devil And The Friar

A Friar came out into the wood; and behold, a Devil huddled up under a fir tree, too late to get back to hell—the cock had crowed. He drooped his tail, all in a shiver, like a kitten in a watering-trough. Then the Friar addressed him:

"'Tis in good season the Lord has sent thee unto me. I have been walking and walking, meeting no devil, yet it is about time for me to bring thy devilish tribe to reason."

And the Devil said to him: "Lo, thou tauntest with thy 'devil,' and 'devil,' yet hadst thou loitered about hell as much as I have, thou wouldst have become more of a devil than I. Suppose we do this: For one year from this moment, I go to thy monastery for correction, and thou to hell for trial. 'Tis high time for me, a Devil, and it won't hurt thee either, Friar."

"Agreed," said the Friar.

No sooner said than done. The Devil put on the cassock and all the monkish dress, and made off to the monastery for correction; the Friar, naked, and with the devil-password—into the gates of hell for trial.

A year passed, and the Friar and the Devil came together at the very same place. The Devil in a cassock, his head oily, his tail docked (for martyrdom), his eyes bulging skyward, and, to tell the truth, he had grown a belly; while the Friar had become all furry, his hair had gone to his tail, his head was bare and all horns, his eye greedy, his body lean, his legs callous to the very hoofs.

Then the Devil in the cassock said to him: "Alas and alack, our heavy sins. Why, how is it, Friar, that thou hast let thyself get into such a state? It is for me to pray for thy soul, eh?"

And the the Friar said to the Devil: "Pray," says he, "pray not, it is all one to me now. Only take this word from me—I go no longer to the monastery. To have tasted such freedom, and then again to weary my bones out at the monastery—go and look for a fool. In your monastery, how are things? Now it's hot, now it's cold; now it's fasting: if thou laugh thou sinnest; whether thou art wise, or whether thou art a fool, it's always the abbot who gives the rule; happy or angry, keep to thy prayers; when thou feelest like sleeping, get up and work, and when thy veins burst with strength, thou must lie as in a grave; touch no wine, fast and repent, and languish to the death. But consider our hell! All the year round it's summer; 'tis free in hell—think as thou pleasest; if you feel cruel, inflict pain upon the sinners; and when in good spirits, swill wine and vodka; play cards or dice, pay visits to devil folk; be thy blackest black, or the whitest white; whatsoever they wishest, that thou mayest do: cry laugh, fight little fist-fights, stand up or wallow—sin thy fill, thou needst not repent. For folk who sin can get to no place farther than hell!"

So they parted, each to his own affairs: The Devil to the monastery, and the Friar to hell.

The Moon And The Sun

A desire was kindled in the young Moon to roll across the skies in white daylight: "I want to, that's all."

Granny Night pleaded with him: "Come to thy senses, little grandson. Is it for thee to shine in the white day? Behold, even I am seen only because of my darkness but if I crept out in the broad light of the Sun, no one would notice me. Just look at thyself: lean and long, thin with growing, pale of face. Sit thee by day behind the hill, and glide around at night time. If you pop out now, you will only make the hens laugh."

But it was of no avail. The youngster wouldn't even listen. "Enough," he said, "for the pot-bellied Sun to burn and boast in the sky, to stretch and flaunt his red mug across the sky, as though from behind a bar. As soon as he rube his eyes open in the morning everything is up and doing: noise, shouts, singing, running and fussing, laughing and toiling; even the blades of grass begin to stretch themselves. Whereas I, when I come out into the sky, I bring on peace, calm and soothing and God's blessing. 'Tis true that all sorts of evil things do come forth, but for them I have been given no eyes. They are on Granny's conscience."

Granny tried this and that. "Be wait for me, the Night, for Christ's own sake."

But the youngster would not even listen: "I am full grown," he said. "Am I a lady, that I must go about with a granny? I," said he, "will show him, the Sun."

So he rolled out and strutted across the sky, like a cataract on the eye, a laughingstock for the hens. And the Sun twitched his eye at him, and said: "Howdy, poor waif! There's a smart little fellow for peeping out in the daytime. Get warmed up a bit in the Sun, and may be even thou wilt get a little red in thy cheeks. As it is thou art a young moon, and yet sickly. Well, warm thee to thy heart's desire, but I must be on my journey."

And the Sun began to roll for the joy of men and for the delight of everything. While the Moon just bungled along, and worried his granny, and made the hens laugh.

Grandfather And Grandson

There once lived a grandad who was so industrious that the Devil felt jealous. He had a gallant grandson, who stayed not at the hut, did not want to work, refused to help, but revelled past midnight. He came home only to snooze, and spent all his time in the tavern.

For a long time the granddad endured it and tried to argue; the chap would not be brought to reason. At length his granddad's patience gave out; moreover, the devil out of envy egged him on. Granddad bethought himself thus: "This grandson of mine—he skins me alive, he is a yoke upon me. So, here: I will endure nothing of this sort from now on."

So granddad took all his substance, his money and his clothes and made off to the tavern, and began to guzzle wine, and to squander his possessions. At first the grandson rejoiced: it meant more company for him. But later, when he got up from his sleep in a hut that was neither heated nor kept clean, and when he missed both his granddad and his granddad's possessions, the grandson came to his sense. One day he came to the tavern, where granddad had been drinking vodka all night, and amusing the people—behold him trotting about in circle and saluting! The grandson stood under the window, and began to coax: "Come," he said, "granddad, come home. The hut is full of rubbish. Aren't you ashamed of yourself, old man?"

But his granddad said to him: "Up to now I was a fool, but hereafter I won't be so any more. I have encamped in this tavern, and, as for thee, thou canst do what thou likest."

Henceforth a new order began. Granddad drank and swilled, while his grandson worked and toiled: As to the Devil, it was all the same to him, grandfather or grandson—neither would escape his claws.

The Rooster And The Goose

The Rooster had been staring at the Goose, and had grown so silly that he crowed out of time. The hens became much disturbed; they discussed, and reasoned, and doctored the Rooster—he did not come to his senses. Everybody taunted him: "Thou'd better drink wine, Rooster."

Once he blared forth at such an unearthy hour that his own conscience struck him. So the Rooster went to the witch-doctor. "Hello," he said, "I have become so enamored of the Goose that I forget to sing my songs to the sun. The hens mock me at every step. Life is simply unbearable."

"What is thy beloved heartache like?" asked the witch-doctor.

"Ah, such a queenly beauty, tall of stature, her voice clear, her little crest dove-colored, her beak like a little bast-slipper, her eye a scarlet flower, her little feet red, her feathers satin, her breast white, and a gallant bird she is, as she walks upon the grass not a blade will she bend, and when she sets forth on the river——cockadoodledoo!"

The witch-doctor saw that the Rooster was altogether bewitched and loony. "My, but thou art a fool, Rooster," said the witch-doctor. "Thou hast looked at the sun too long, and hast therefore grown owlish. What is all this drivel thou hast been telling me? That's the Firebird you are describing. But thy Goose. Beauty, indeed: she looks like a roadpost, her beak like a boot, her eye like rusty brass, her breast roan, her crest like a bastwisp, her voice like a trumpet, an uncouth fowl; when she walks on the grass the earth groans under her. As to thy cockadoodledoo, let me tell thee this, Rooster: It behooves thee, Rooster, not to crow when the silly Goose sets out on the river, but it behooves thee to sing, Rooster, when the fair sun is rising!"

And the Rooster felt so ashamed that he has been silly ever since.

Hongkong's Cenotaph

The erection of the proposed Cenotaph which is to commemorate the services of Hongkong men during the war is to commence at an early date. Plans for the column have arrived and are now in the hands of the Secretary, Mr. M. J. Breen. The site for the memorial will be the plot of ground at present occupied by the Prince of Wales' Pavilion and the cost is estimated at $30,000. With regard to the Nursing Home, which it has been decided to erect in addition to the Cenotaph, Sir Paul Chater has said it will be located on the new road to the Peak. Any estimate of the cost of this establishment would be difficult to arrive at, but he thought that it would amount to roughly, $300,000.

The Perfect Answer

The question, "What is poetry?" has been answered innumerable times and as many times has it been answered differently. The answer in itself now makes a large and distinguished literature, to which, full as it is of keen intelligence and even of constructive vision, we can return with unstaling pleasure. The very poets themselves, it is true, lending their wits to the debate, have left the answer incomplete, as it must, not in the least unhappily—always remain. And yet, if we consider the matter for a moment, we find that all this wisdom, prospering from Sidney's Apology to today, does not strictly attempt to answer the question that is put. It does not tell us singly what poetry is, but it speculates upon the cause and effect of poetry. It inquires into the impulse that moves the poet . . . and describes, as far as individual limitations will allow, the way in which the poet's work impresses the world. When Wordsworth says "poetry is the breath and finer spirit of all knowledge," he is exactly, in one intuitive word, telling us how poetry comes into being, directing us, with an inspired gesture, to its source, and not strictly telling us what it is; and so Shelley tells us in his fiery eloquence of the divine functions of poetry. But poetry is, in its naked being, and apart from its cause and effect, a certain use of words, and remembering this single fact, there has been one perfect and final answer to the question, "What is poetry?" It was Coleridge's: "Poetry—the best words in the best order."—John Drinkwater.

Imagist Verse

I suppose few literary movements have been so little understood as Imagism. Only a short time ago, in the "Yale Review," Professor John Erskine confessed that he had no clear idea of what was Imagist verse and what was not, and in unconscious proof of his ignorance, spoke of Robert Frost and Edgar Lee Masters as Imagists.

To call a certain kind of writing "a school," and give it a name, is merely a convenient method of designating it when we wish to speak of it. We have adopted the same method in regard to distinguishing persons. We say John Smith and James Brown, because it is simpler than to say: six feet tall, blue eyes, straight nose—or the reverse of these attributes. Imagist verse is verse which is written in conformity with certain tenets voluntarily adopted by the poets as being those by which they consider the best poetry to be produced. They may be right or they may be wrong, but this is their belief.

Imagism, then, is a particular school, springing up within a larger, more comprehensive movement, the New Movement with which this whole book has had to do. This movement has as yet received no convenient designation. We, who are of it, naturally have not the proper perspective to see it in all its historic significance. But we can safely claim it to be a "renaissance," a rebirth of the spirit of truth and beauty. It means a re-discovery of beauty in our modern world, and the originality and honesty to affirm that beauty in whatever manner is native to the poet.—Amy Lowell, in "Tendencies in Modern American Poetry."

Books Read By Folks At Home

A SHORT STORY OF THE IRISH PEOPLE FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO 1920. By Mary Hayden and George A. Moonan. With maps. Published by Longmans Green & Co. $7.

There is no more egregious banality than reference to the filling of a "long-felt want." Yet, if without impropriety I may adapt the French philosopher's words about the Deity, if that worse than hackneyed phrase did not exist and had not long existed, we should have to invent it specially for this book. Complete and satisfactory histories of Ireland have ever been conspicuous by their non-existence. Yet there is probably no country in the world the history of which it has been more desirable for the world to know authentically, than that same island. Most readers have gained their information of it from scanty passages in histories of England, or else from special partisan histories of special events and eras. A comprehensive history of the Irish people, not only politically, but industrially, socially, intellectually, devoid of passion, prejudice or propaganda, has not only been lacking, but in fact has been classed pretty generally with perpetual motion and the quadrature of the circle.

Professor Hayden and Mr. Moonan have, however, achieved the impossible. They have given us here a volume which covers the history of Ireland, or rather of the Irish people, from the legendary era just after the Noachian Deluge down to the year 1920, which while necessarily as concise as a dictionary also approximates the latter in comprehensiveness, which is a marvel of directness and lucidity, which despite its amazing compression, yet contains enough juice to make it agreeable reading, and which, mirabile dictu! is generally a model of calm, judicious impartiality. "While writing from a frankly national standpoint," say the authors in their brief preface, "the authors have made every effort to attain accuracy and avoid prejudice. Events are dealt with, as far as possible, in the spirit and atmosphere of their own times, but are judged by their final effects upon the destinies of the nation." Now that was an ideal aim for true historians, and it has been attained to a most gratifying degree. Tolerably familiar with Irish affairs since the days of Isaac Butt and with the whole array of Irish, Anglo-Irish and American-Irish histories, I should be at a loss to name any other considerable work comparable with this in fairness and judicial breadth of vision.

Note a few touchstone passages—those which would, if any could, arouse fierce passions and violent expressions. At Drogheda, for example, what of Cromwell? We are told that he was ruthless and showed no mercy save in isolated instances. But in the next breath we are told that at Clonmel, despite his exasperations at his heavy losses and at the gross trickery which was practiced upon by the Mayor, he loyally kept his word. Again, in the supreme episode of the siege of Londonderry Macaulay himself, in one of the purplest of his purple patches, was no more appreciative of the valor of the defenders than is Professor Hayden and no more severe against the barbarity of the Jacobite commander, Rosen. And yet again in the story of Boyne Water she recognises that the Irish defeat was largely due to the recreant spite our intense aversion to lengthy quotations in any review. Here is it and it surely is good: "Haldane was the first War Minister since Cardwell who poured thought and science upon the British military muddle (as a cook may pour white of egg upon a thick soup). In the interval the many good men and capable men who ruled the War Office did not include, I respectfully submit, an organizer."

That's a rather hot opener. See what follows. 'Luckily for England, Haldane's cranium was Von Roon shaped. England didn't deserve Haldane. England deserved an orator, a politician, a rich nobleman, or perhaps, even a 'business' man. Haldane saved England — though himself he could not save—by his philosophical and organising instincts. In dealing with a part Haldane always saw the whole. Most politicians only see a part—their own part. In all the luck of England she never had a finer stroke of luck than that Scotchman. The fates never span a more impish web for the two Kaisers than they span when, into Arnold Forster's vacant chair, slipped—with his singular, side-long step—Haldane. His mother, magnificent specimen of Northumbrian feminity, had an inbred horror of the Germans. A cousin by marriage of her mother's was French, and this lady had told old Mrs. Haldane when she was a small child that she and her sisters were locked up in the cellars whenever the Prussians passed, although they were allowed to look out of the windows at the troops of any other nation. This story had so great an effect upon the child's mind that when she grew up she determined that no children of hers should ever have truck with these terrors. As usual the parental prohibition created the craving. Nothing would satisfy little Richard and Elizabeth but Hegel, and a habit of thinking carried out to the absolute nth. So into the big room at the War Office, and on to the chair where so many budget-to-budget, expedient-seeking Anglo-Celts had sat, was ushered a philosopher who started from the assumption that being equals nothing. Great fun, that, really; a first class celestial joke. Here was a man who took nothing for granted, not even a sergeant major. His mind instinctively recoiled from the existing, or 'being' and ran backward to the 'nothing,' or starting point. He first took the rules and regulations and created in his mind a model sergeant major; thence by process of thought he kept improving him until, suddenly, he ran up against a live sergeant major, and no doubt found that he was by no means all he should have been."

We've used up our space and we haven't said anything about Hamilton's argument for the proper making of an army. He threads his needle of battle description with a string of most intelligent advice on national needs in time of war; foresight by men in charge of affairs; discipline to the last button, and a loyalty that expresses a people's soul thrilled to great deeds. The general pattern he stitches is opulent in color, racy hues of his own plucky personality in a rich carpet of history in tense years.

THE SOUL AND BODY OF AN ARMY. By General Sir Ian Hamilton. Published by George H. Doran Company. $5.00.

If Sir Ian Hamilton ever decides to write a history of any era in the long record of warfare, he can depend on one man as a hastener to a bookshop to get a copy of his book when it is published. Stuck into chapters of his ebullient and polemic "The Soul and Body of an Army" are some of the finest fragments on battle, its surge and its drama that we have ever read. Turn to pages 169-173 and get into the rush of his story of the struggle at Lake Thrasymene, between the Romans and the Carthaginians. Where, in any other history of the fight, can you find such a backsweep of imagination to the place, the clash and the flight? And how well he appends his epilogue of comment; supreme leadership, perfect strategy and tactics and discipline that knew no wavering or fault in execution. Then, too, there are brief flashes in reminiscence of other stirring scenes and episodes in other wars. Here is a bit, absolutely true to the winter of 1812; fatal to Napoleon in Russia. Hamilton sees the majors striding in advance of the Old Guard. "Advancing like a pillar of fire by night and a pillar of smoke by day, these shapes strode forward at the head of the Old Guard, and no mortal power could stand against them—nothing was ever to resist them—until the white clinging snowflakes of Russia had congealed the last drop that had flowed through their valorous hearts."

One laughs, ponders or almost gasps over certain sections of this bayonet of a book. Hamilton's thrust in attack is hard to parry, and his hits at human inaptitudes and cobwebbed systems are quick, with a spontaneity of inspiration fired by mirth. He must be what we call a "personality," this British general, who writes and talks just as he thinks, words keeping pace with the current of his thought and no dam to obstruct their flow. You get a clew to his whole book right away, at the outset, in his caustic comment on the creakiness of the English General Staff at the opening of the war, a time when, if ever, the machine should have been ready to function smoothly, with plenty of mental oil at hand. His dragging down of curtains is complete. The stage was not ready. Generals were moved about fatuously. Kitchener was summoned and then tied hand and foot with tape. The whole thing got moving with precision only when a few civilians were pushed on from the wings. What Haldane accomplished brings genuine laudation from Hamilton, and Winston Churchill's inspired idea of throwing marines into Antwerp is praised to the limit. How these post-bellum remarks and confidences must hurt some fellows near London is not even imaginable.

To our fancy, Hamilton's picture of the apparition of Haldane arriving on the stage is so delicious that we quote it entire. de-James, who thought less of fighting than of making good his flight, while William boldly led in person his troops into the fiercest of the fray.

No incident in Irish history has evoked stronger or more lasting passions than the repudiation of the Treaty of Limerick. More than half a century later "Remember Limerick and Sassenach faith!" was the war cry of the Irish exiles at Fontenoy. But Professor Hayden treats it as calmly as though she were demonstrating the binomial theorem. William III sincerely intended to keep faith. The Irish commissioners were guilty of inexplicable and inexcusable carelessness in assenting to so vaguely drafted, confused and ambiguous a document. Nevertheless, the English Parliament was guilty of a disgraceful breach of faith from a grave reflection of which the King himself cannot be freed. It would be interesting, indeed, to learn of any serious and responsible modern historian who could maintain any contrary propositions, though it would not be easy to find any writer who has stated the truth of that lamentable tragedy more directly and convincingly than Professor Hayden.

Much attention is appropriately paid to the manner in which Irish industries were handicapped and Irish prosperity was destroyed by the imposition of England's selfish commercial policy. It was the enforcement of that policy which caused the failure of Grattan's Parliament and which partly cajoled and partly coerced the island into the Union. With the deeds of violence which marked those times Professor Hayden deals with fine impartiality. She spares neither the United Irishmen nor the Orangemen for their crimes—which, unhappily, were numerously committed by both. Robert Emmet she, of course, regards with profound sympathy, as who does not? But she recognises that his insurrection was foredoomed to failure and that being captured his tragic fate was inevitable. On the other hand, she has nothing but detestation for his lawless followers, who brutally butchered Chief Justice Kilwarden and others.

The two great nineteenth century leaders of the Irish people in their political struggles receive all the attention which space in so crowded a volume permits, and it is finely discriminating and judicious. It was well to pass lightly over the Gladstonian era, especially over the manner in which English party politics affected the Irish cause at Westminster. Those things belong to British rather than to Irish history, and they are still pretty close to our own time. But so far as she does deal with them the author does so frankly and fearlessly and with admirable candor. Her narrative is brought down to the beginning of the end in 1920. We must hope that another edition will presently have an additional chapter, completing the absorbing narrative down to and including the creation of the Irish Free State.

Miss Hayden is professor of modern Irish history in the National University of Ireland, and Mr. Moonan is a special lecturer on history in the Leinster College of Irish. If they teach the history of their country as they have written it in this volume their students are to be envied and greatly felicitated.

Famine Relief In Russia

An American Girl's Picture Of Conditions In Buzuluk And Other Towns Where Want And Disease Are Taking Their Dread Toll

"We pulled into Buzuluk in the small hours of the morning one week ago, our car hitched to the tail end of a freight car; and we are still here in our house boat on the rails. Our last move was only a yard or two to get into the lea of a warehouse. We had frozen so fast to the rails in even those few hours that a locomotive could not move us and it had to back off and give us a kick. Even then we coasted, as the wheels did not move at all."

This is the beginning of a letter from Beulah A. Hurley, of New Hope, Pennsylvania, now in Russia as a member of the Quaker Relief Unit, which was received at the headquarters of the Quakers in Philadelphia.

Miss Hurley reached the famine area of the Volga where 15,000,000 Russians are starving, about the middle of December and is taking charge of the distribution of the Quaker Relief work in one of the sections of the Buzuluk district. The Quaker Relief Unit is working in connection with the American Relief Association.

"This business of cooking, living, receiving callers, running an office, and housekeeping for a unit of thirteen in a square box-car wherein five also sleep is close work, but we have learned much. The kick from the engine upset the soup, but it hit nothing but one seat and the side of a fur hat, but presently the tea water was also upset and it washed the soup off the hat so we were all tidy again.

"On Sunday Miriam West and I moved out in the night and slept up in rooms in the town which the Mission has taken for its headquarters. For two nights we slept in real honest to goodness beds. How is that for a record of the last two weeks? Take warning all ye who come to Russia and bring along all the bed and bedding you hope to use. Also bring some magic powder to lay a little ring all around your camp on the floor and say an incantation over it before you retire, or else you may find before morning that you are a 'host in yourself.'

THE DREAD TYPHUS

"The reason we moved from the box-car for those two nights was this: The doctor found that Nancy Babb, who lived on the first bottom shelf of our tiny closet had more than flu. It was typhus and as there was no hospital in Buzuluk we planned to hitch this car to a west-bound train and have her in Samara the next day. Therefore the sudden move in the night with the baggage of all ten of us and the foodstuffs for Buzuluk and the household equipment for the five Units about to open. When we arrived at the house we had to open the foods and pack a supply of them to send up with Nancy Babb and a nurse to support themselves at the hospital.

"No train either way the next day as everything was snowed up. So the day was spent in looking for a room for an isolation ward in the rooms meant for a few people and which were housing a mob of us. It was impossible to secure other rooms in the village for the town of 18,000 now houses 35,000 and some parts of it are ruined since the Denikine campaign went across this district. The upstairs room where six men of the unit live had to be evacuated and their belongings taken to the dining room. We hated to do it in their absence, but we rolled up their bedding and effects and placed it at intervals around the dining room. By nightfall Nancy was installed in the vacated room and some of the men moved back into the car, as the floor of the dining room was all taken up by the table where we ate in shifts of ten.

"The rest of the week has gone to moving us back and collecting the stuff to go with us to our two units in the East and also to the making ready for the supplies and personnel to accompany the two units to the West. They moved out on Wednesday night and we expected our eighteen food trucks from Samara to come in the next day. Thursday sixteen of them arrived having taken seven days for an eight hour run. Norowsky went out at once by the Tashkent-Moscow express to get the two cars which had broken down and he has just now come in with them; so the men will lead the work with clothing and chocolate in the morning and we hope to pull out by night.

DESOLATION EVERYWHERE

"The home life we live here in comparison with Spartan is rigorous, but it is a luxury to the type of life we see all about us. Scarcely a day goes by but one may see at least one dead body lying along the way or in the market place. Three days ago a father and mother and two children dropped in the snow together. At night one can hear the cries and pleadings of the crowds at the station entrances trying to seek a bit of warmth. No one may go into the station except those really waiting for trains, and so every morning the human bodies that have frozen to death must be carried away from the entrances. Even from those who have been all night in the station, heated only by human warmth, bodies are taken of those who have died of starvation or cold. The cemetery itself is a ghastly place where bodies are piled up in trenches like so much cordwood and the naked bones of the bodies makes the simile all the truer. The pile is now visible a quarter of a mile away. The clothing is all stripped from the bodies as it is too valuable to be lost.

"But even worse than the dead bodies in the snow, left there sometimes for days, are the walking skeletons who totter about from house to house hoping to find enough to live on another day. The children show bare skin as they trot on weeping with the cold. There are not crowds of these, but just a few here and there looking almost like stragglers from an army. We wonder which of them may be stark dead before night.

"Doris White is still at the first outpost that she and Murry Kenworth opened forty miles south of the railroad, and her letter which reached Moscow told of the necessity of starting feeding at once to prevent the children from being sent into town and abandoned. Horses are dying so fast that they cannot carry the food in wagons fast enough, so they are trying to use camels, which eat less. But the camels are starving and their humps are usually flabby and empty of the reserve strength which they usually carry there. Miss White begged to have more help sent but added: 'Send someone with no heart, for it is a cruel task.' She reported that cannibalism has begun in the outlying districts and that an old woman and a child of nine have already followed the cats and dogs which have been consumed.

TURNING THE BALANCE

"It is colder here than in Moscow. Most of this week it has been about thirty below zero. But it is dry and bracing. Do not be alarmed for us personally as we are getting along in a good manner. We brought our own supply of flour and bake our own bread rather than take any of the bread of the country, as it means a saving in the supply here and also in the readjustment of our digestions to this local stuff.

"It did not take us long to adopt the custom of the country and sleep with doors and windows shut and a fire going. We are learning to smell an open door several rooms away just like a Russian does. A mile between our house and the warehouse is most inconvenient at times, but it has the advantage of forcing some exercise in the open. The six short hours of sunlight are of brilliant beauty, the plains stretching away like the sea to the south, and then to the north there is a line of lovely hills—foothills of the Urals.

"Rest assured that what we are doing is not just making people comfortable but turning the very slight balance between life and death for these thousands, and the more you send us the more of these desperate folks will have the chance to live. There is food enough in the world if it can be evened up, but the actual problem of transportation is terrible here. All the rolling stock is old and it is too scarce to put any of it away for repairs. So the engines are running along patched up with whatever of wood and iron is available.

"So it goes, and the tragedy deepens with the cold. Christmas time will be upon us in a few days and I hope by that time we may have distributed those carloads of food and that there will be news of thousands more. It is gallant work you are doing in America for with all the unemployed there we know there are many calls for help. May the new year bring fuller capacity for sympathy and strength for service.

"We wish you all God-speed in the task."

TIRED MORNINGS?

When you awake in the morning feeling tired out, feeling worse in fact than when you went to bed, you are confronted with the characteristic symptoms of neurasthonia. It is due to the run-down condition of the nerves that rest does not bring renewed strength and sleep refresh the tired brain. Overwork and worry are the most frequent causes of this condition.

If you are nervous and melancholy and are losing strength and energy you will find the story of Mr. J. W. Mills, who lives at 5 Deepdale Lane, Upper Gortnal, England, encouraging and interesting.

Mr. Mills saw three years' military service during the Great War. "After returning to England," he said, "I began to feel the effects of my war experience. I was fatigued by the walk to work in the morning, and when I reached there I was fit for nothing. I struggled through the day as best I could, but all the time my head, eyes and back ached.

"When I got home I was absolutely 'done up.' My head trouble, and the great difficulty I experienced in concentrating on anything made life a burden. I derived no benefit from doctor's medicine, nor from other remedies which I tried.

"Then I read about Dr. Williams' pink pills, and gave them a trial. The first few pills I took arrested the physical and mental inertia from which I was suffering, and I soon knew that I was on the right track.

"I persevered with the pills, and my physical weariness was soon dispelled. It is no longer a fatigue to get to my work. In fact I feel that I have taken on a fresh lease of life, and I am like a new man. I sleep better, eat much more heartily, and in every way feel stronger. I am quite sure that I owe everything to Dr. Williams' pink pills."

If you are a sufferer from any of the symptoms described above, do not delay, but begin a course of Dr. Williams' pink pills for pale people. Of dealers, or direct from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 96 Szechuen Road, Shanghai, $1.50 per bottle, $8 for 6 bottles, post free.

Excellent Remedy for Constipation.

It would be hard to find a better remedy for constipation than Chamberlain's Tablets. They are easy to take and mild and gentle in effect. Give them a trial when you have need.

Washington, March 24.—Business is gradually getting back to normal, according to a report issued today by the Department of Commerce.

Exchange Fluctuations
Asia Banking Corporation

March 25, 1922

Spot and forward bar silver were each up ¼d. in London yesterday.

The New York price advanced to 65 cents, and the London-New York cross rate is unchanged at 438⅝.

The official rates here today were unchanged from yesterday, and our market was steady with practically no variation in rates throughout the day.

Business in Sterling was done at 3-3½ for March, April and May, and in Gold Dollars at 72½ for March, 72⅝ for April and 72¼ for May.

There were at all times good sellers at a fraction below these rates and good buyers at a fraction higher.

However, very little business was done.

There was little doing in the London silver market yesterday, but the market there, as well as in New York, is reported as being steady.

Kandy Puts On Great Spectacle For Prince

Colombo, March 24.—Reuter's Special Correspondent with the Prince of Wales telegraphs:

Kandy by night has been very much more wonderful than Kandy by day during the Prince's twenty hours visit. Not because of the quaint ceremonials, dwarfed almost into insignificance by reminiscences of the Indian tour, but simply because it was Kandy with which India has nothing to compare. The illuminations which were confined principally to festoons and colored lights around the exquisite lake gave just the magnificient touch of mystic glamor to the enchanting picture.

Towering forest hills blotting out the stars all around loomed in magnified shadows through the indigo gloom. The sultry air was heavy with the fragrance of luscious plants and spices. The teeming crowd, always flowing on without diminishing, looked fantastically picturesque in the illusive gleams from Chinese lanterns and shaded lamps.

THOUSANDS OUT

All night long there swelled and lulled the babel of thousands whose gala spirit banished sleep. All night long there arose the drubbing and bleating of tom toms and pipes. The durbar of Kandyan chiefs, which opened the after dinner festivities, was a striking display of oriental color and grouping but with only little of the grandeur of the Indian States.

The Prince of Wales received upwards of a hundred of these bejewelled and brocaded chieftains, who may be likened to heads of clans. The Audience Hall with its column-supported roof, giving it an appearance of a substantial pandal, formed a richly quaint setting to the slow glittering little pageant filing past His Royal Highness, who afterwards thanked them cordially for their loyalty.

Then, through a gaily canopied arcade, the Prince and his staff walked to the Maligawa or Temple of the Tooth, where he was received by the High Priest who revealed to him the much cherished tooth of Buddha, a gigantic curved incisor reminiscent of the tip of an elephant's tusk. This treasure, which reposes within seven successive caskets, is only disclosed on very rare and impressive occasions.

ELEPHANTS IN PARADE

Then the Prince proceeded to witness a perahera or procession of elephants to which each chief contributed from his private herd so that 132 of these animals draw out the spectacle to a mile long interspersed by several cars bearing grotesque idols of gigantic stature and other cars carrying native musicians and batches of wildly capering devil dancers with batches of attendants cracking whips in endless volleys.

The whole languidly moving pageant was luridly lit up by double rows of flambeaux bearers, so that the thronged streets of Kandy waxed and waned in a wonderful palpitation of hues. The Prince received a roaring reception whenever he was sighted.

Early this morning the Prince of Wales motored out to the Peradeniya, claimed to be the most perfect botanical gardens in the world. After inspecting the bo tree planted by King Edward VII and the na tree planted by King George, he himself planted a munamel sprig amidst acclamations from the dense vast ring of spectators.

His Royal Highness received as memento a silver and ebony mamotie replica of the paddy hoe and an album of photographs of peradeniya plants. On the way to the station, the Prince paused to watch elephants bathing in the Mehaweli Ganga. Returning to Colombo the Prince of Wales attended a race meeting at Prince's Club in the afternoon. Enormous crowds were present.

Power Factory Owners Scored For Carelessness

(Reuter's Service)

London, March 24—In the course of the trial of Mr. J. W. Knowles and Mr. Eber Chadwick on the charge of manslaughter in connection with the explosion of the cartridge factory at Tipton, a representative of the Public Prosecutor declared that precautions for the safety of the young girl workers had been utterly disregarded.

The work of breaking up ammunition, he said, was not dangerous if ordinary care was taken but the girls were not searched and wore nailed boots on a floor of concrete strewn with powder. There was a stove in the shop in which the soldering irons were heated.

The nineteenth victim of the explosion has died.

Whole U. S. Fleet May Go To Pacific

(China Press Service)

Washington, March 24.—Radical reductions in the Navy estimates may result in the abandonment of Atlantic waters by the navy and the concentration in the Pacific of a greatly reduced fleet. Navy men state their belief that not more than 12 battleships with the proper complement of destroyers and auxiliary craft could operate for the working out of war problems and keeping the navy fit under the present estimates.

It is now deemed certain that this consolidation will result from the conviction that it otherwise will be impossible to give the necessary training.

KINGMAN & BROS.
How to Preserve the Teeth

In order to keep the teeth in a good condition scientific precaution must be taken. Through negligence, decay and numerous other affections such as tooth-ache, dental periostitis, esteo-periostitis, necrosis of the jaw, etc., may arise. During the process of ingestion, there are settled on the teeth some deposits of mineral and organic matters, called tartar, which possesses a morbid power of pressing the gum. As an inevitable result of the presence of this tartar, the teeth will become elongated and movable and will, by degrees, absorb away the enamel, leading ultimately to the decay and degeneration of the teeth. The tartar is so hard and resistant to the process of brushing that it cannot be scraped off except with dental instruments specially devised for that purpose.

Dr. KINGMAN offers to the public his service for preserving their teeth at an annual subscription Fee of $10.00 per head to be paid in advance.

The work to be done by Dr. KINGMAN to the subscribers consist in:—
(1) Cleaning of the teeth quarterly.
(2) Filling with gold platinum alloy only, when the teeth present holes.
(3) Inspecting the teeth at any time at the desire of the subscribers.

Boll Weevil Plague Hits American Cotton

Insect Pest Will Have Serious Effect On This Year's Production, Says Official Of Anderson, Clayton & Co.

The boll weevil will affect more than any other single factor the cotton production in America during the coming season, according to a letter just received by Mr. T. O. Schmid of Shanghai, from Mr. W. L. Clayton, a member of the firm of Anderson, Clayton and Co., Houston, Tex.

"In our opinion," writes Mr. Clayton, "the boll weevil will affect more than any other single factor the cotton production for the coming season. We believe eventually that science will conquer or greatly minimise the destructive activities of the boll weevil, but this will require much experimentation and education for which time is necessary. Hence, it is our belief that at least for the coming season the possibilities of great damage by the boll weevil can hardly be exaggerated."

Mr. Clatyon's opinion is backed by that of Professor Coad of the bureau of entomology's delta laboratory near Tallulah, La.

"Not many men know as much about the boll weevil as Professor Coad," says a writer in the Galveston, Texas, News. "Professor Coad is in charge of the bureau of entomology's delta laboratory, which is near Tallulah, La. Among the many things that Professor Coad has learned about the boll weevil is that when there is no more cotton to be destroyed he takes himself to the moss that beards the trees of that section and ensconces himself for the winter. There he either dies or lives till another planting of cotton is offered him to operate on. Whether he perish or survive depends on the temperature during the time of his hibernating. If it gets very cold he is apt to perish, for there are temperatures even in that latitude against which the moss gives no warmth; if it does not get very cold he survives and begins to stretch himself along about the middle of February, preparatory to the season's operations. About that time every year, for several years, it has been the practice of Professor Coad to gather bunches of moss from a number of trees considerably removed from one another and count the number of live and dead boll weevils to be found in every bunch. A simple calculation with the data thus got will supply a pretty good estimate of the number of dead and live boll weevils in a ton of moss, and that information, when compared with information obtained in like manner in preceding years, foretells with substantial accuracy, as experience has proved, how much an offensive these Huns of the cotton patches will probably make during the season of operations almost beginning.

"Professor Coad has just finished his latest calculation. The prophecy of it is not encouraging. It indicates, among other things, that while the number of weevils taking refuge in the moss last fall was smaller than in

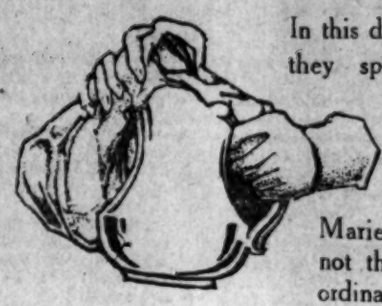
Watch the Hands

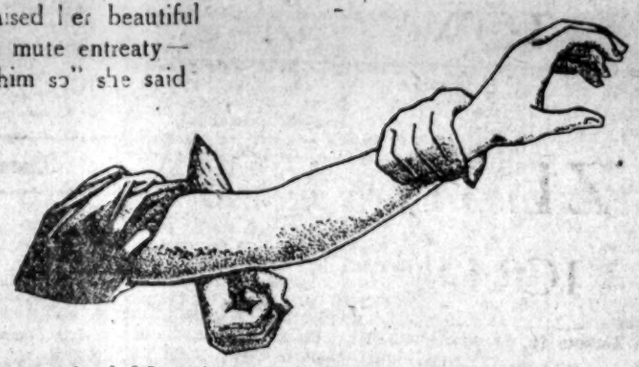
In this drama of love and mystery they speak a various language



Marie's hands were not those of an ordinary housemaid

Midnight found Marie's hands differently employed

Marie raised her beautiful hands in mute entreaty— "I love him so" she said



Roger seized Mazie's wrist as Blinkie's fist clenched threateningly

Blinkie and Mazie raised their glasses—— "to the boodle" they said.

three of the eight years for which Professor Coad has kept records, the number surviving the winter is five times greater than ever before. The weather bureau made the winter to the boll weevil's order. For example, the examination showed that 424 weevils had taken refuge in a ton of moss in 1914, and only 129 in 1921, but also that of the 424 only ten were alive in February, 1915, whereas of the 129 that had taken refuge in a ton of moss last fall, only two perished, 127 being alive in February this year. Thus, subject only to the chance that the weather will be extraordinarily destructive of the boll weevils, the expectation must be that the infestation will be much greater this year than in any year during the last eight.

"What suggestions does that prospect make? Obviously, for one thing, that there is no likelihood of a big cotton crop this year. Even a big acreage would give but a por promise of a big crop because of the probability that the boll weevil will take as his part a larger percentage of the total planting than usual, and than ever before, perhaps. In that case, the price would be high by the test of the average for ten years, but that it would be high enough to be profitable by no means follows. At 20c, or even 30c, there is small profit in growing cotton when the boll weevil takes half of the possible harvest. What counsel, then does this prospect give the farmers? To plant an acreage that will produce a normal crop, even though the boll weevil should take a greater toll than ever before? To do that would be to pay the boll weevil's wages. Clearly, it seems to The News, the sensible thing to do is to ignore the factor of the boll weevil, that is, to plant only such an acreage as would yield a normal crop if the boll weevil took only his customary toll. Then, if he took more, it would be the consumers and not the producers of cotton who would pay his wages. There have been some to advise that the acreage be measured to the probable takings of the market, plus the probable takings of the boll weevils. If that were done, Professor Coad's forecast would call for the largest acreage ever put to cotton. And if that were done, distress would be the certain portion of the cotton growers. For the market would have all the cotton it wanted, even if Professor Coad's forecast should be verified, and much more than it wanted if it should not be. The prospect of an extra-ordinary boll weevil infestation counsels the farmers to put in a small acreage of cotton. This, too, is the counsel of all other prospective conditions.

"The wise policy for every farmer is fairly manifest. It is to devote to cotton all the land and energy he has after making sure of a plentiful supply of those things that he will have to buy if he does not grow them."

IODISED THROAT TABLETS Allay all irritation

THE General Public is hereby notified that supplies of "IXL" IODISED THROAT TABLETS, the remarkable new throat remedy that is now being so largely and successfully prescribed by physicians in Great Britain, are now being made available for residents in China.

Representing the latest advance in scientific throat medication, these tablets, by reason of their Iodine content, are indubitably superior to any other pastilles or tablets that have yet been evolved by scientific research.

Their use is positively indicated in all cases of Sore and Ulcerated Throat, Hoarseness, Quinsy, Throat Catarrh, Tonsilitis, Laryngitis, etc.

As a highly efficient throat disinfectant when epidemics are rife, IODISED THROAT TABLETS indoubtedly excel any other preparation yet put upon the market.

No malignant Diptheria, Influenza, or other germ can find lodgement on a membranous surface that has been subjected to the peculiar antiseptic influences of these tablets.

Pleasant to the palate, and allaying all irritation, each tablet, as it slowly dissolves in the mouth, releases, in harmonious combination with other fine quality medicaments, a specific quantity of the pure Tincture of Iodine, to soothe, heal, and sterilize the inflamed area.

WARNING:—All cartons of the genuine and original IODISED THROAT TABLETS bear the "IXL" trade-mark, and each tablet is embossed with the letter "A." Reject feeble substitutes.

All first-class chemists supply "IXL" IODISED THROAT TABLETS.

Those Dear, Dear Peking Shopping Sprees, Sighs Poor Elsie McCormick!

By Elsie McCormick

UP in Peking they have discovered a new form of dissipation. There the wail of the saxaphone calling to its mate lures but a few straggling couples on the floor, unless it be Saturday or the anniversary of something. The click of the mah-jongg slabs is as faint and timorous as the sound of a newborn castinet; the verbs, "put and take" apparently carry no connotation outside of the dictionary meaning. If there is a roulette table in the city, it is living as retired a life as a man dodging a summons for jury duty.

But when the regular dweller of Peking feels like getting out of bounds and acting careless, he resorts to a different form of activity. He goes out on a shopping spree. In Shanghai, shopping is something accomplished by the cook or houseboy and resorted to by the rest of the family only under extreme provocation, such as Christmas, or a spring hat sale or a visiting deputation composed of thinly-disguised tourists. The average resident shops violently a few days after his arrival and a few more days before his departure, but the time in between is a hiatus during which shopping is confined mostly to writing chits.

In Peking, however, shopping leads as the chief sport, pastime and dissipation of the capital city. Perhaps nowhere in the world is there less relationship between that you need and what you buy. We know of one family that has twenty-seven Kwan-yins and no nut-crackers. An inventive genius of the city is busy perfecting a pocket that will close automatically and push out a thorn at the top every time the owner passes a curio-store. Occasionally we entered a home bare of embroideries and guaranteed Chien Lung vases, but before we had time to congratulate the owner on his unprecedented self-control, he would bring out a collection of jade or of carved peach-stones and thus spoil our little speech.

MAKE SHOPPING HARD

We always imagined hitherto that people liked to do their buying with a minimum of inconvenience. They don't. If the department stores at home really went to relieve the business depression, they should cut themselves up into dark little cubby-holes, preferably entered by means of a hurdle-race over the livestock, put the goods in charge of clerks who don't speak English and abolish the price-tags. Then people who pass now with only a languid glance into the beautifully arranged show windows would fall over each other in the effort to buy something on a muddy street at three times its rightful price. The trouble is that retailers have all these years been making shopping easy, when what they should really do for their own prosperity is to make it hard.

The shops in Peking are grouped together according to their line of goods. For instance, there is Embroidery Street, where the Mandarin coat has its lair, where the footprints of the cutwork panel are often observed, and where the bones of the ceremonial petticoat are sometimes dug out of the antediluvian soil. Here each embroidering family puts its small-fry out to watch for the first flutter of a foreigner-bearing ricsha. Hardly does the lady tourist come to a full stop before a dozen or so grimy little hands are pulling at her coat, accompanied by a cantata of "Look see, missie," "This way, missie," "Velly ploper shop, missie." Anybody who has ever explored New York's East Side is reminded of the shirt-sleeved gentlemen who rush out of the stores on Grand Street and forcibly kidnap anybody who doesn't pass the establishment on a dead run.

THE ANTIQUER ANTIQUE

The average embroidery shop in Peking is about as large and airy as a condemned cell. It averages one clerical assistant for each square foot of space, not counting the ricsha coolies who usually edge in to watch the purchases and collect a subsequent cumsha from the storekeeper. Prices are determined by a system of parliamentary procedure, which includes much disparagement of the goods, and several false starts for the door. The merchants are really philanthropists in disguise who lose money on every purchase. They admit it themselves, but somehow, despite their financial reverses, they always press one to come back again. Probably they are subsidised by the Chinese government.

The days when it was quite possible to secure Mandarin coats that had actually seen a Mandarin are gone forever from the crooked little byways of the capital. There are a few old and precious embroideries still in circulation, but they are not granting any interviews to passing tourists. Most of the old coats seen by casual visitors were aged by being passed rapidly back and forth over a floor just due for the annual New Year cleaning. The wily Peking merchant early learned the foreigner's prejudice against anything new. He therefore proceeded to accomodate him by burying bronzes, dimming brasses, discreetly chipping porcelain Buddhas, and submitting embroideries to a course of jui-jitsu that would give them the appearance of having been associated with a Mandarin who had no knowledge of dry cleaning.

Embroidered coats this year are so high in comparison to the past that most purchasers imagine they are also buying the Mandarin. Residents of Peking cast the blame on tourist parties who pay the first price asked and certain professional buyers from Shanghai who apparently haven't any time to haggle. Every time a convention or commission goes through, Peking dwellers declare, prices climb the nearest available pole and stay there like a frightened cat for some time after the visitors have departed.

COLUMBINE'S BRIGHT IDEA

Just at present there is a heavy demand for Mandarin petticoats. These garments were usually purchased with a vague idea of using them "sometime" and they occupied trunk-room for the rest of their natural lives. Some enterprising Columbine or Columbia or whatever the feminine of Columbus is, recently discovered that by cutting the embroidered panels from Mandarin skirts, joining them with rectangles of tasselled georgette to serve as sleeves, and sewing the skirt together again, a semi-negligee can be produced which at home would stop the conversational traffic at any tea-party. Therefore the ladies of Peking are buying Mandarin skirts in droves, herds and battalions, and prices are climbing rapidly to the top of Chien-men gate.

It seems physically impossible for any mere human female to stop buying in Peking. Therefore if her own pocket-book proves to have no fourth dimension, she goes into business. Fifty porcent of the foreign missies in the city are running an exporting trade as a sideline or else are doing a drawing-room retail business. Many an innocent visitor who attends an apparently disinterested little function encounters a pile of Mandarin coats beside a determined-looking hostess and doesn't succeed in getting out for less than fifty dollars. We have figured that tea and macaroons are likely to prove more expensive in Peking than anywhere else in the world. Even the fifteen dollars an ounce tea of Amoy can't quite compare to the Peking variety.

There are other streets in Peking—Jade Street, for instance, and Silver Street and Brass Street, to say nothing of the outdoor fair at Lung Fu Ssu. We can't give a catalogue of all we bought in the capital but it should be sufficient to remark that we went up first class but came back second, and after borrowing money to pay our hotel bill, too.

Why All This Bath Business In Shanghai Anyway, Asks Irene Corbally

By Irene Corbally

HISTORY does not record whether Adam and Eve had a tiled bathroom and an early version of a Soochow bathtub in their little nest after they left their duplex apartment in Paradise. Neither does history state who started this bath stuff, anyway, but not a thousand fool-proof combination liars and silver-tongued Bryans can convifice the visitor to certain parts of Shanghai that it was the Chinese.

Candor compels me to state that some Chinese have been known to take a bath now and then. Number 1 boy in an establishment in Shanghai recently absented himself from his duties for a half-day. On his return his reply to the "Sung, where wert thou?" was "Have go bathside, missy. Feast day come bye and bye."

Despite the fact that the delights of sloshing around in a tub full of water are indulged in on an occasional feast day, only, in China, I should not want to be so unfair to the Chinese as to say they never bathe. There are more ways of bathing than by washing with water.

There is, for instance, the w.k. mud bath, which every ricsha coolie takes on a wet day, and there are the somewhat lesser known peat earth baths, of comparatively recent origin. Peat earth is carefully prepared and pulverised and then worked up with water into a pasty consistency, of which the temperature can be regulated before the "patient" immerses himself in it. These baths are scarcely Chinese, however; they are more suited to the tastes of Irish senators and aldermen.

ALL ON TAP HERE

Cold, tepid, hot, hot air, sun, electrical, vegetable, Turkish, Russian, public and just the common or kitchen variety of Saturday night bath are all on tap in China for the great unwashed, but nobody seems to want them. The Chinese subscribe to the theory that since men have been known to live one hundred years without taking a bath the people who live with these water-haters must take their own chances.

The occasional public bath in Shanghai is for men only. Whether or not the Shanghai ladies are sewn into their clothes as soon as the proud parents have agreed that the offspring is not going to grow any more remains to be seen. It would seem to be borne out by this municipal favoritism for the men, however.

As in Norway, the Shanghai public bathhouse has 1st, 2nd and 3rd class baths. On the first floor it's a sort of free for all where the finicky coolies having parked their raiment, shove off into a tanklike affair.

On the floor above, there is less pushing. Here the size of the towel and the cake of soap, if any, depends on the emolument which is presented to the attendant. The victim slips off his clothes and slips on a piece of soap, maybe, into a large tub with a seat across the top. Here the Knight of the Bath pummels him into a spongy condition that permits of easy wringing out.

FOR PRIVACY, 40 CENTS

When the laundry has been washed thoroughly he is allowed to stroll into a reclining room where he can smoke his water pipe, drink tea and tell the latest Chinese travelling salesman joke to his boy friend on the right. In about an hour the chiropodist is announced and this scissors expert holds a conference with the pedal extremities of the bather.

The actual rites of the bath are the same in the 40 cent 1st class rooms upstairs except that there are foreign bathtubs and more privacy.

A Chinese who arrives at maturity and acquires enough courage to essay a flight into a public bath usually emerges cleaner and more chastened but ambitious for further sanitary improvements.

For him, there is the barber. The old style barber who held forth on the street corner and sang while he shaved all the hair off'n the head of one of his customers and then dusted off his queue, finishing up with a playful pummelling about the neck and shoulders, has to a great extent gone by

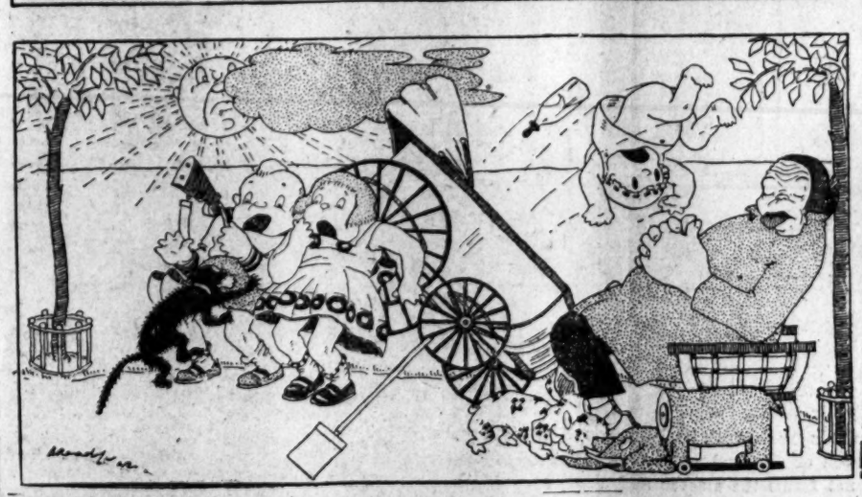
TO REGISTER OR NOT TO REGISTER — By Arcady



JUST above and to your left, ladies and gentlemen, behold the graceful No. 1, epitome of deft skill and artful acquiescence, serving at his master's board. A praiseworthy individual he is, happy in the knowledge that he is rendering a real service, content in having found his proper niche in a world which so many of us are inclined to think too filled with indissoluble complexities. He is not registered, nor has he any desire so to be.

And below, the artist, Arcady, gives us his vision of what might ensue should servant registration become the actuality which its proponents had hoped it would be, and should the graceful No. 1 and his equally graceful fellow students in the school of deft service align themselves definitely against the proposal.

To the right, Arcady considers with his pen eventualities should the cook align himself against registration in just as definite a manner. Above, milady finds a kitchen where contentment reigns. Eggs, fifty of them, cost her $1.20. The cat, entranced, lists peacefully to the warbling of the canary. "Peke," the pampered household canine, dwells in joyous amity with "Biddy," the Sunday hen.

But, if registration comes—look below! Where once was blissful quiet, all is now confusion. Eggs have leaped in price to more than double their former value. The guilty cat bulges ominously before the devastated home of the canary. And "Biddy" flees in frantic haste before the wild onslaughts of "Peke."

And on below we have caretaker of the youngest set pictured neath the shining sun in loving adoration of her charges. Joy unbounded is reflected throughout the picture.

BUT—When the registration program is put into effect, says Arcady, look for sullen skies and squalling sons and daughters.

CHIN CHIN

Larry's Chin Chin appears in THE EVENING STAR daily.

France is providing wives for inhabitants of her penal colonies. They sure treat 'em rough when they put a man in jail colonies nowdays.

WE HAVE SOME RELATIONS THERE, TOO

(Galena, Ill. Gazette)

"Mrs. K. H. Willings and little daughter Lucy left Sunday for — — — where they will visit with relatives for a few days."

Lieutenant Papa, an Italian flyer, flies 172 miles an hour, according to cable reports. We know a lot of Shanghai papa's that have to go faster than that to keep the wolf from the tea-cups.

WOODEN SHIPS

They are remembering forests where they grew—
The midnight quiet, and the giant dance;
And all the murmuring summer that they knew
Are haunting still their altered circumstance.
Leaves they have lost, and robins in the nest,
Tug of the goodly earth denied to ships,
These, and the rooted certainties, and rest —
To gain a watery girdle at the hips.

Only the wind that follows ever aft,
They greet not as a stranger on their ways;
But this old friend, with whom they drank and laughed,
Sits in the stern and talks of other days
When they had held high bacchanalias still
Or dreamed among the stars on some tall hill.

—David Morton.

Mr. A. Dumb Bunny arises to remark that the trouble with most of his personal friends is that they are altogether too personal.

QUESTION AND ANSWER DEPARTMENT

Dear Mister Larry: Why is it impossible for Albania to hire an American king as they wish?

With the movies giving Mr. Hays such an enormous stipend (as some calls it) and the Bank of Italy taking Mr. McAdoo away from the movies with more dough how can poor Albania be expected to have a look in at hiring a first-class kink.

Larry: What is the secret of success in life?

Youthful Male.

The same as in business—keep your window open and your mouth shut.

Dear Larry: Is Marriage a success?

Thinker.

Well, it may not be a failure but you must admit the bride never gets the best-man.

"This hash," said the star boarder at one of Shanghai's best known boarding emporiums, "makes me think of the three graces."

"Isn't that sweet" honked the eager landlady. "Why?"

"It must be taken with faith, hope and charity."

Then they served the prunes.

Mr. J. C. Squire writes the kind of verse we like to read by the fireplace when the rain is pattering on the new tin roof and you hear the whooo—o—oo of the wind in the eaves. One of his litttle monochrome's, for instance, entitled:

FEN LANDSCAPE

Wind waves the reeds by the river,
Gray sky lids the leaden water,
Ducks fly low across the water,
Three flying, one quacks sadly.

Gray are the sky and the water,
Green the lost ribbons of reed beds.
Small in the silence a black boat
Floats upon wide pale mirrors.

That might well have been written by Chang Chih-lo, the poetical bird who took wing from his official position and parked himself in the mountains refusing, as he puts it, "to bury his ethereal self beneath the dust of the world." He called himself the "Old Fisherman of the Mists and Waters" and spent his time wielding a wicked bamboo fish pole but used no bait "his object not being to catch fish."

Argus was in the dumps.

"What's the use of a hundred eyes if you haven't anybody to wink at? he asked.

Then he and I went to the tea rassle.

LARRY

Beneath Sunny Skies

by Lady Duff-Gordon

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

By Lady Duff-Gordon
("Lucile")

BLEAK February—no less than verdant May — has always been a fashionable traveling season. The swagger set are filling their trunks with suitable apparel and making off to St. Moritz for the Winter sports or flying southward to warmer climes. For the delightful sunny skies of the southland I have fashioned the clothes I am showing this week.

The under brim of the light hat is designed of soft silk crepe brocade, stretched snugly over it's rolling surface. The crown and upper brim are covered with layers of fine lustrous straw. At a perky angle, a sheaf of fine feathers slants downward from the brim.

The promenade frock, with its background of vivid green, is a combination of silk and net. The bodice is of taffeta. Transparent net forms the sleeves and skirt, over which an apron tunic of exquisite color combination forms the trimming. The hat worn with this frock is fashioned, too, of sheer material, filmy chiffon clinging snugly to its foundation, and boasting a contrasting organdie for upper brim and bow.

Evening calls for its dansant. And the dansant, in turn, calls for its appropriate frock. Any ballroom or fashionable casino ought to be flattered by this evening creation of soft chiffon and fur.

Alternate two squares of picoted chiffon and you will attain the uneven hem line that gives this gown its chief charm. Cut a simple bodice and fold it back to reveal a lining of jewel trimming and add a fluff of fur to each sleeve and you have the secret of this fascinating bit of finery for evening wear.

FASHIONS Evening Dresses In New York Fashion Shows

New York, February 20.—Harbingers of the Spring season crowd upon us from all directions. From Paris come the cables of the openings there, while right here in New York we are being treated to fashion exhibits that are truly American in character. Recently, at the Commodore, the best of America's fashion creators paraded their gowns for the fashion people to revel in and to take shining examples from the clothes of American women this Spring.

While the dresses designed for the street have a tendency to remain at a very moderate length—not to say short—those for afternoon and evening are creeping floorward at no uncertain pace. And it is interesting to see how variously the different designers achieve their purposes by drapings and transparent flouncings and panels and ruffings and underskirts and things.

For those women who will not accept the frankly long skirt (either because their figures are too short or because they want to remain youthful in appearance), there are gowns with trailing trains to make them look long, while at other portions of their skirts the legs are allowed to show almost to the knees. This style will continue to please those husbands, too, who vowed they would not be parties to the reappearance of the longer skirts. It took them a long while to come around to a whole-hearted acceptance of the shorter skirt; but having reached that point, they seem—many of them—determined to remain there.

One evening gown at the National Garment Retailers' Fashion Show recently was made of a black beaded robe just draped about the figure in classic lines, with straps of cut jet to hold it in place over the shoulders. On the left side of the skirt the draping was opened and made a short skirt line, almost to the knees, while on the opposite side the lines of its draping curved downward until it barely escaped the floor.

Another of these very brilliant gowns was made of some soft and illusive shade of metal cloth—that is, one which had a color woven in with the silver threads. Its skirt was draped in one of those irregular ways that brought it very low on one side, where it spread out into a graceful train, and from the other side the fabric came from a higher point, to fasten under the drapery of the train. The interesting part about this gown was that when its lovely wearer stood still in one spot, it had every appearance of being quite amply full. Then when she stepped along the path the movement of her body transformed the lines of the skirt so that they followed her figure exactly.

All the evening frocks had simple straps for the shoulders, with as much neck showing as possible. One was of red velvet, and the shoulder straps were composed of twisted velvet, making a cord of about half an inch in diameter. But the lines of the necks were mostly square across the front, with some divergence in the back, according to the design of the gown in question. What trimming there was appeared at the waistline in the form of a girdle or, sometimes, a more elaborate sort of trimming, that spread beaded medallions on the waist or skirt.

The materials were soft velvets, plain metal cloths and heavy satins and, according to the inspiration received by each individual designer, the lines of the draped evening gowns followed the characters of the fabrics used. Most of the colors were brilliant in the extreme, showing a marked tendency to get away from black, which has been so astonishingly popular during the last season. Yellow in the brighter shades appeared repeatedly establishing a precedent for its use during the coming Spring and Summer.

When the draped evening gowns are considered, then there is a distinctly different type for the young and the slim woman. It is draped, to be sure, but it is extended in some way at the hip line, so that the gown assumes a distinctly bouffant appearance. It is made, more usually, of the thinner materials and of taffeta which, of its own accord, puffs out into distended lines.

One dress of this type was made from heavy flowered taffeta, the tight little colorful bouquets of flowers being scattered over a background of stiff cream-colored silk. The skirt was invested with full panniers over either hip and, falling from that point, it reached the ankles. There was a short-waisted bodice and little, old fashioned puffed sleeves, giving the effect of lovely maidenliness combined with a real old time charm.

Some of the evening dresses were short, as far as the foundation material was concerned, and then had extra lace of gold tissue flounces below that line, which made the skirt long, and yet not long. It was a compromise that many women will like, because it forms an easy transition between the long and the short and allows them to gradually become used to the longer lines.

From Paris we gather the first news of the Spring openings there. Of course it is, as yet, only snatched information transported by cable, but it serves to give an idea of what the Parisian coutouriers will sanction for forthcoming styles.

The simplicity of the drapings of gowns, the latest creations of Martial et Armand and Cheruit, is their most noticeable characteristic. There seems to be only a suggestion of a gathering of the fullness at a certain point, or at various points, as the case may be. But in the manner of that draping lies the center of interest in the frock, and around it the trimming and all of the lines of the gown are grouped in harmony.

Cheruit's gown illustrates that regularity of beaded trimming which has proved itself so acceptable, and in this case the cross lines of bead tubes and circles follow the line established by the draping about the lowered waistline.

The gown from Martial et Armand has a somewhat higher waistline. That is, a second tier of velvet ribbon establishes a more normal line, while the lowered one remains there, as though to demonstrate its unwillingness to be pushed from the center of interest, which it has held so uninterruptedly. This frock is made with an underdress of silver that shows charmingly on the bodice under the arms.

Then the overdress is made of a beautifully soft piece of panne velvet, embroidered by hand over its entire surface with designs in silver thread. The velvet is a light violet in tint, and the velvet strips of ribbon about the waist, along with the velvet and silk flowers grouped at one side, are in a deep tone of purple. Incorporated in the making of the blossoms are petals of silver cloth, and the straps over the shoulders are made of this same material.

Cheruit's gown is all white—the satin which forms its foundation and the various sizes of beads from which the embroidery is made. White, they say, will be one of the popular tones for Spring, and, it seems to be the rule that when a frock is white it shall be kept entirely white, without touches of color to relieve it in any way.

As for sleeves for evening gowns—well, there aren't any sleeves. They just don't seem to enter the calculations of the designers. Some of the gowns are made with rounded and almost fitted armholes, while others follow more closely the style of the Martial et Armand frock which resorts to straps to hold the bodice in place and scorns any thought of sleeves or of the places where sleeves ought to be.

This rule held good in the gowns shown in New York's fashion exhibit recently. Sleeves did not enter into the running. They seem, indeed, to have departed from all evening considerations, the arms being left, with the exception of bracelets, to shine in unadorned splendor. This sleeveless tendency bids fair to carry over to afternoon, and even to morning, dresses, for unless the sleeves are the most conspicuous feature of a gown, then they are absent altogether. And the time of day for which the frock is destined seems not to matter at all.

A French evening gown has been very successfully draped from a combination of lace and charmeuse. One whole side of the dress, including bodice and skirt, is made of folds of black all-over lace. Then for the other side there is only black satin used, except for the tiny sleeve, which repeats the black lace of the opposite sleeve. The lace, strangely enough, is on the right side, and it is caught in a tight bunch at the waistline under a black velvet flower, made with extremely pointed petals.

Another French dress has one side made of a straight panel of rose satin, while the opposite side and the front of the frock is draped from one piece of the same pink fabric. In fact, nearly every dress that Paris presents

THE CYNIC AND THE BEAUTY COMPETITION.

POWDER PUFFS IN THE BALANCE.

THE recent "Daily Mirror" Beauty Competition seems, like a stone dropped in a pond, to have awakened a series of ripples which penetrate to all parts of society.

Hardly can one go to a "Victory Ball" for a few hours' undiluted merriment not entirely unconnected with jazz, without finding that the dancing is to be interrupted by a "beauty competition." Certainly the winners of these affairs do not leap into fame and fortune at a bound like the "Daily Mirror's" lovely find, but they probably enjoy a certain amount of private satisfaction.

One can imagine a cynic inviting his lady guest to a beauty-competition-dance. They appear painted, powdered, and marcelled. They dance, until the small hours, in the tempered glare of electric lights. Comes the dawn. The lights are turned out: the curtains pulled back to let in the cruel morning light. "Ladies," says the host, "will you take your places for the Beauty Competition?" Need any more be said?

Few of us claim the perfection of beauty as set forth in someone's criterion.

"If you can face the sun when all the others are sitting with their backs towards the light," but under more kindly illumination it is possible to look one's very prettiest at a dance. One must admit that the heat of ballrooms and the ardour of dancing are foes to the complexion, and what maiden in these days of serious dancing dares retire too frequently to powder her shining little nose?

Yet even this has its remedy, as the wise girl knows. Before coming to the dance Phyllis bathes her face and neck with a solution of pure cleminite, which she rubs well into the skin with her fingertips until it is quite dry. This done, her complexion assumes a peach-like finish which will remain unchanged during a whole evening's dancing.

I suppose every girl would like a new frock for each dance she goes to? But even the unemployed would find that rather a strain on the exchequer. It is a consolation, even if a poor one, to reflect that no amount of frocks will give a girl real prettiness—which is what counts in the end. A pretty complexion, which is the beginning of all beauty, is quite cheap, you know. For about one half-penny you can have a clean, fresh, new skin (not the old one cleaned up for the occasion) for every dance you go to.

I expect any girl could explain this apparent mystery. For the benefit of those who cannot, here is the solution. Get some mercolised wax from the chemist. It is rather expensive but it lasts a long time with care. Smear it over your face before going to bed, not using too much, and wash it off in the morning. The oxygen contained in the wax absorbs the outer skin which has become rough and coarse, and gives the new skin below a chance to show itself. Quite simple, isn't it?

Certainly, the sort of complexion you get from using simple preparations like the above should be an asset in any beauty competition—even the cynic's!

Why All This Bath Business

the boards, although occasionally a little tike is seen with his towels, basin and cutters, on the corner, singing for business.

IN ONE; OUT THE OTHER

The average barber shop in Shanghai is all modern, including the razors and the white coats of the attendants. The Chinese element remains however, in some of the methods employed, especially in connection with ear excavating. The Chinese who goes for a 20 cent haircut and a 10 cent shave, prefers a serenade on his ear drum with a cotton-topped stick in lieu of the bay rum back home that is thrown in for a finisher. The barbers are expert aural artisans and they wield their little picks with a fine disregard for the space between ears. Standing outside a barber shop for observation purposes only has made me feel that some day I shall actually discover how this business of having something go in one ear and out the other, usually applied to the promises made to retain choice scandal, is worked.

And in speaking of baths let us not forget the foreigner who finds the only pseudo-Turkish bath in captivity in Shanghai in the wee small hours and gets into the wooden crate lined with electric light bulbs that is to perspiration what the old steam room is back home. The owners of this w.k. Turkish bath in town have recently insisted, I understand, that once a gent is locked in the box to parboil, electrically, his head is out and his arms are in, regardless of his desire for "just one more" until he is cooked.

Gentlemen with thirsts are advised to slake them when they park their clothes.

SILKS, SATINS, CREPES, TAFFETAS, PONGEES, LACES, FINE SERGES, AND SO FORTH.

AS Spring approaches, the desire to slip into the lighter things of dress is becoming quite irresistible. This year Fashion has decreed for these lighter things, straight, almost severely simple lines.

The tendency of underthings is perforce toward the simple, to harmonise with the overthings. Very little trimming—but so wonderfully draped!

Of course it needs the higher grade fabrics to catch and retain the graceful draping that will soften the new lines of both under and overthings.

LAOU KAI FOOK has in profusion the finest showing of higher grade fabrics to serve this very purpose.

Good Roads In America

Methods That Have Been Used In Overcoming The Inertia Of The General Public Towards The Demand For Better Highways —How Virginia Is Preparing The Way For Its Bond Issue

BY HARRY W. PERRY

Overcoming human inertia is a monumental task. The larger the aggregate body the greater is the inertia and the more energy is needed to start it into motion. The inertia is particularly great when the desired direction of motion is toward a public improvement that will touch the pockets of practically all citizens and taxpayers. The course then seems very much up grade. It required the full span of a human generation to arouse the public to effective action in the matter of nation-wide highway improvement. And the most potent factors in dissipating the indifference to bad roads were personal discomfort and inconvenience. So long as the hard work of drawing vehicles through mud and sand and over rough, stony roads was performed by horses, the riders in the vehicles were not deeply concerned about the condition of the roads. But when America began to ride bicycles and human flesh had to exert itself to overcome the obstacles, the need of better roads became perfectly obvious—to the bicycle riders, who numbered perhaps one in fifty of the population. So, agitation for good roads began with the bicycle era.

Some good results were obtained, but the improvements were mainly local in character confined principally to cities where bicycles were most numerous and to counties in which such cities were located. Like the horse and carriage, the bicycle was normally a conveyance of local use, confined in the main to a radius of about twenty-five miles from its home town.

It was not until the advent of the automobile enabled people to gratify their wanderlust that highway touring began to be popular and the deplorable condition of the country roads was brought home to city dwellers. The mud, the dust and the roughness seemed intolerable at the higher speed of the motor car, and the agitation begun by the cyclists was taken up by the motorists, but the farmer, who stuck to the horse-drawn buggy and wagon, was not favorably impressed with the idea that he should pay heavy taxes for construction and maintenance of "peacock alleys" for city "joy riders." Then, Henry Ford arrived, and while he never has been particularly conspicuous personally in the good roads movement as so many other men in the automobile and truck industry have been, he probably has been a greater factor in overcoming the farmer inertia than any other. When the farmers became car owners and began to realise the utilitarian character of the automobile, its superior speed and practicability for long-distance travel, their road sentiment underwent a great change. Roads that were good enough for their fathers and grandfathers were no longer good enough for them.

The automobile served to bring city and country dwellers to a common appreciation of the need for better highways and to a realisation of the dependence of each on the other. The city man saw that he depended on trade from the surrounding country and that he used the highways outside of the cities for touring and pleasure riding even more than the rural inhabitants used them. It was borne in on his consciousness that it would be financially impossible for 50 percent of the population and a much smaller percentage of the wealth of the country to pay for improvement of hundreds of thousands of miles of rural roads. Hence the policy of State aid to counties for road work, initiated by Massachusetts and New Jersey in the bicycle era, was generally adopted by other States of the Union, so that a considerable part of the cost of country road construction is paid out of State taxes contributed by city property owners. Moreover, the cost of maintaining the main through roads embraced in the various State highway systems is met by license fees assessed against motor vehicle owners. At first this fell mainly upon city people, who owned by far the larger number of cars and trucks, but a rapidly increasing portion is borne by farmers and other rural inhabitants as they become possessors of motor vehicles.

As touring grew in popularity and long-distance trucking increased in volume, it was forced on public attention that highway use was no longer purely local but was interstate and national in character and that the old system of delegating all road authority to county and township boards was unsatisfactory. It was not only expensive and wasteful because of the multiplicity of officials and their lack of engineering ability, but it did not give a connected, continuous system of good main highways linking up the principal centers of population, although investigation showed that the main routes carried about 80 percent of all the traffic.

Conditions were very much improved where State highway commissions were appointed and given full authority over State highway systems, but when highway transportation grew to national importance and the Federal aid act was passed, it became evident that even the State was not a large enough unit to exercise full authority, since the State was concerned with traffic within its own borders and not greatly interested in making the best connections with through routes in adjoining States. It is this situation that has brought about the insistent demand for creation of a Federal Highway Commission and a Federal highway system to be built and maintained by the national government.

A first essential under the existing Federal aid act, before a State can obtain a government allotment for road work, is the creation of a State Highway Commission having supreme authority over a State highway system. The State must then appropriate for highway improvement an amount equal to the sum contributed from the National treasury and plans of the State commission for each road project must meet with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture in Washington, who is charged with administration of the Federal aid act. Most of the States have complied with these requirements, but in many the work has lagged for one reason or another, while, with the rapid increase in motor vehicles and the pressing need for better transportation, the demand for first class state and interstate roads has become compelling.

The one real obstacle to the rapid building of State systems of main roads suitable for the growing traffic 365 days in the year has been the inability to raise by taxation the great sums of money necessary to pay for actual road construction as it proceeded. Several thousand miles of hard, durable roads were needed in each State without delay and the average cost of such roads would be from $20,000 to $25,000 a mile in normal times. Even if $5,000,000 could be made available each year for new construction, only 200 to 250 miles could be built annually and a system embracing 5,000 miles would not be completed inside of twenty or twenty-five years. The hopelessness of a road program on such a basis was apparent, since the citizens would not be willing to pay heavy road taxes for a quarter of a century and wait that long for completion of the system. The taxpayers in the remoter counties would complain bitterly that they were getting no benefit from the taxes they were paying and would bring irresistible pressure to bear on their State representatives to interfere with the program. Neither could taxes be increased sufficiently to pay $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year so as to complete the undertaking in from seven to ten years.

The only way, therefore, to get the roads quickly was to finance the work by bond issues covering a term of twenty to thirty years. By borrowing money on State bonds issued at the rate of say $10,000,000 a year as the work went forward, a large mileage could be completed in a few years while repayment of the loans would be spread over a long period during which the whole public would be enjoying the benefits of the improved roads and saving enough in time, wear and tear on vehicles, increased loads transported and better market values to pay interest and sinking fund without feeling the burden seriously.

New York State set the example of this policy fifteen years or more ago when the voters authorised a bond issue of $50,000,000 for a State highway system, followed about ten years later by a second issue of equal amount. Since then upward of half the States in the Union have followed the lead, with bond issues in varying amounts up to $75,000,000 authorised in Minnesota last year to be sold at a rate of not more than $10,000,000 in any one year. Authority to make such bond issues had to be obtained from the citizens by referendum vote at general elections, in some States by a majority vote on the proposition, in others by a two-thirds majority of vote cast for and against the proposal, and in at least one State (Illinois) by a majority of all votes cast for State assemblymen—virtually a majority of all votes cast at the election.

Consequently a lot of energy had to be released by a small percentage of the voters to overcome the inertia of the great majority sufficently to take an interest in the question and cast their votes in favor of highway bond issues. And very energetic work had to be done to overcome active opposition from a few sources. The story of how some of these campaigns were carried on to a successful conclusion is interesting and instructive and should be an inspiration to good roads advocates in other States where highway improvement is lagging far behind the times.

Virginia is now engaged in a campaign of this kind, the first stage of which was concluded successfully at the election last November but the final stage of which will not be finished until the General Assembly of 1922 has acted on a bill fixing the amount of bonds to be issued and authorising their sale. Commenting on the work of the Virgina Good Roads Association, with headquarters at Richmond, V. D. L. Robinson, executive secretary, makes the following observations:

"The Virginia Good Roads Association was successful in securing the passage of a constitutional amendment by the General Assemblies of 1918 and 1920 and its ratification by a vote of the people at the November general election. This amendment was carried by a majority of 62,357.

"The amendment, as advocated by the Association and as adopted, merely removed a constitution inhibition against the use of the State's credit for the construction and reconstruction of public highways. We are now engaged, therefore, in a campaign in which we hope to build up the proper public sentiment which will result in the General Assembly of 1922 going on record as favoring the issuance of $50,000,000 in bonds and authorising the issuance of State bonds to the amount of $12,000,000 for the two-year construction period prior to the session of the next following General Assembly.

"We followed the orthodox plan used by Illinois, Michigan and other States in reaching the public with the facts. The Illinois Highway Improvement Blue Book, published by the Illinois Highway Improvement Association, of which W. G. Edens is president, describes in a general way pretty much the steps we took in our campaign. As with Illinois and Michigan, we used very effectively a five reel film entitled 'Virginia's New Hour,' which was made for us by J. W. Brooks, who was then with the Federal Highway Council and who is now with the American Highway Educational Bureau, Munsey Building, Washington. Four prints of this film were used in a very intensive way during the three months immediately prior to the general election. These films were in charge of field secretaries, who endeavored to cover one or two towns every day and also made addresses and assisted in perfecting county organisation.

"Our efforts were concentrated in the counties or sections where we located any considerable opposition to the amendment. Influential men were sent into these counties to make a series of addresses, in addition to special work of strong committees which were organised for the specific purpose of overcoming this opposition. How successful we were in this plan is evidenced by the fact that we secured majorities in nineteen out of twenty-two individual cities and eighty out of one hundred counties. In the four largest cities of the State, through the co-operation of the Kiwanis and Rotary clubs, we had teams of workers at every voting precinct who stayed on the job throughout the entire day, interviewing voters as they came to the polls.

"The most effective results of our organisation work were secured through the women's organisations. We found deep interest manifested by the good women of the State in the improvement of State highways. They were glad of the opportunity to use their first vote and influence at the polls in behalf of the good roads cause.

"In our campaign we not only sought the endorsement of various group organisations, but endeavored to get them to work through their own organisations, particularly where they were of a State-wide character.

"Immediately following the passage of the constitutional amendment, the Virginia Good Roads Association started about creating a large organisation of State-wide membership preparatory to carrying on its fight for adequately financing road construction. Our next step has been to present the facts relative to highway construction to the people. We believe our success with the next General Assembly is going to depend largely on our ability to reach the people with definite information regarding present phases of highway construction and the expenditure of State money under control of the State Highway Department. We believe the time is past when any organisation can expect to dazzle the people with a lot of generalities to secure their support for a highway program. It is our observation that the majority of the people are for good roads and want to be shown how they can be obtained economically and efficiently. We feel that it is our duty, as an association attempting to lead the people to better highways in the State, to give the public sound and constructive advice as well as information on this subject.

"Following out this purpose, the Association most carfully prepared a statement of facts with reference to the expenditure of State and Federal road money during the past three years, showing what is being done with the remainder of the funds this year and just why it is necessary to issue bonds if the State is to be permitted to go ahead as rapidly as possible with the construction of roads so greatly needed. This statement of facts, together with estimates of future revenues, was carefully checked over by prominent bankers and bond experts as well as by actuaries of large insurance companies. After they had pronounced the figures used as very conservative, the complete program was sent to a list of over 500 heads of chambers of commerce and other civic organisations, bankers, lawyers, farmers and other representative men over the State, asking for their constructive criticism and suggestions as to any improvement of the plan outlined which they cared to offer. The letters received in reply were gone over carefully by the executive board of the Association and the final program arranged. This program will be disseminated intensively throughout the entire State. While the question does not come up again to the vote of the pepole, excepting indirectly through the instruction of their representatives in the House of Delegates, we want the people back home to be as well informed on the subject as their representatives in the General Assembly.

"Although confident of final success, we have before us a real stiff fight, brought about by politicians who have sought to take advantage of a present business condition to frighten the people of the rural sections in particular against the issuance of bonds, with a hope of bringing to their support the naturally conservative element found in every rural community. But as they must resort to misleading statements and generalities to support their arguments, we find that wherever we are able to get these people to study the facts in the case as we present them, we have no difficulty in bringing about a reaction against political influence."

Mr. Robinson emphasises two important points in concluding his comments: First, that organisations planning similar campaigns in other States should prepare a complete survey of all present conditions surrounding highway construction and base definite recommendations on this survey; and, second, that the public should be given all the facts in clear, concrete form, being assured that with a full understanding of the case the average citizen, who really is deeply interested in good roads, will help the organisation achieve success.

Spring Shackle Rattles Annoying

Spring shackle play or looseness between the spring end and the shackle may give much annoyance until the seat of the trouble is discovered. Rattling caused by this looseness will be more frequent and distinct when the car is riding over fairly rough roads.

A good method of taking up the play is to place shims between the spring end and the shackle. Or the play may be removed by tightening the spring bolt. Watch the shackles and do not allow mud to accumulate, for small particles of flinty grit in the mud make their way into the working parts and cause excessive wear. Lubricate the shackle bolts generously.

Wiring Diagram Of Car Helps To Locate Trouble When Horn Won't Blow

Knowledge Of Circuits Necessary If Repairs Are To Be Made Without Calling Trouble Man

One of the most uncomfortable feelings a driver can have is experienced when he finds that the horn does not blow. Everyone recognises this condition as being unsafe both for the passengers in the car and for the pedestrian, but the horn will not blow simply by wishing. One must understand just how the horn operates and how it is connected to the battery and switch, otherwise an attempt to find the trouble resolves itself into mere guessing.

There are two general types of horns in use, the motor-driven and the virbrator. In both types a metal diaphragm is made to vibrate. The diaphragm is like that used in a telephone receiver. In the motor driven types there usually is a notched member on the end of the armature shaft. As the armature revolves rapidly this notched member (or dog) strikes a hardened button in the center of the diaphragm and so causes the latter to vibrate. In the so-called vibrator horns the principle of the electric bell is used, a movable member striking the diaphragm.

Every horn has two terminals and it is through these that current flows into the interior mechanism. The horn button operates a switch which permits current to flow only when pressure is applied.

The exact path of the current is not the same in all cars because of the different wiring arrangements used. That is why it is quite important that you have a wiring diagram always in your car, or else be so familiar mith the circuits that you can trace them without the diagram. This is difficult to do because one forgets wiring so easily, especially the complicated wiring found on our cars.

In practically all cars the battery has one side grounded, therefore any unit operated by the battery has one side grounded. The horn is no exception. One of the terminals carries current into the operating mechanism, the other permits the current to flow out to ground so as to complete the circuit. But this current flow takes place only when the horn button is pressed, or when there is a short in the button contacts or in the wires leading from the button. In the latter instances your horn keeps blowing without pressing the button.

When you press the horn button and the system is in good working order, current flows from the battery, through the ammeter, thence to some unit such as a fuse or circuit breaker block and thence through the horn, out of the horn to ground, thus completing the circuit. In some systems, the horn wire is attached directly to the battery, in others to some current carrying wire back of the instrument board. You may find that one connection of the horn button is grounded instead of the ground being taken off one side of the horn itself. You must know just where the horn wires are attached if you wish to find out the exact cause of trouble of any kind.

But suppose the horn does not blow when you press the button. The first thing to do is to make sure that current flows to the horn. You merely disconnect the wires attached to the horn and rub them together while the horn button is kept pressed down. If there is arcing you then know that current is reaching the horn and the trouble, therefore, must be in the horn itself. If there is no arcing, the horn may be all right and the trouble may be in the wiring, the switch, or perhaps the battery.

If decided that the trouble is outside the horn, where it usually is, trace back through the wiring for broken insulation. A break may expose the bare wire and ground the current before it ever gets to the horn. Stranded wire, such as is usually used, may have a few strands, or even one, just barely touching a metal part, or if the wire is in a metal conduit, the strands may be touching the conduit and thus grounding the current. If the wires seem to be well protected look for loose connections at the ammeter. Such a loose connection would not permit the ammeter to register when the button is pressed. You might disconnect the wire at the ammeter and ground it by wiping it across a metal part of the car. If there is arcing you know current is getting to ammeter and therefore the trouble is beyond that unit and in the wiring from there to the horn. If there is no arcing at the ammeter connection when you press the button the trouble is further back—in the switch itself, in the wiring or the battery. You can tell if your battery is weak by a simple hydrometer test or by its action in turning the starter or lighting the lamps.

If you should trace the trouble back to the switch, make sure that the switch is working by disconnecting the wires of the switch and touching them together. If the horn blows the trouble is in the switch itself. On the road it may be quicker to keep the wires outside of the switch and avoid that unit altogether, until you have time to have the switch repaired. You may be required to go back further than the switch, to the wiring leading to the circuit breaker, fuse block, or other connection. If fuses are used, try one of the known good fuses.

If, when you rubbed the two horn wires together, you found there was no arcing when the button was held down, the trouble is in the horn itself. In the motor-driven horns this may be caused by a brush that does not make contact with the commutator, a bad internal connection, armature bearings worn so much the armature shorts itself against the pole pieces, and all other trouble to which an electric motor is heir. The vibrator horns operate much the same as an electric bell. The contact points may be too far apart or too close, or the return spring may not be springy enough.

A horn that growls, showing signs of weakness, may result from trouble in the horn itself, weak current supply or a drain somewhere along the line. Usually it is weak current supply from the battery. This can be checked by using the horn when the engine is turning over rapidly, in which case the horn will blow with its usual vigor. However, the current supply may be sufficient, but the connections at the horn may be loose, or there may be some internal resistance in the horn tending to prevent the motor from revolving fast enough or the vibrator from moving at its usual speed.

just now has its own individual features of draping, as there seems to be no certain ruling of line to lead the way.

Another of the French originalities of design is draped from a salmon pink tissue, the whole dress being done from one piece, or so the general effect would lead one to suppose. Then across the back there is laid diagonally a strip of deeper-toned salmon silk, so dark that it almost touches on vermilion. It reaches from the right shoulder to the left side of the waistline, and there it twists around until it goes on to line that part of the draping that swings off into a pointed train.

The headdresses from Paris grow more and more amusing. Besides the wreaths and bands of silver and gold and colors, there are the little brocaded caps which the Parisian loves to wear with costumes that allow of their use. It is made of heavily-brocaded silk in a distinctly Oriental design, and with it are worn a pair of looped earrings, made of the tiniest of seed pearls strung on light wires. Of earrings there are many, in all sorts of rare and beautiful designs, and the headdresses are coming more and more to shape themselves in tune with the dangles at the sides of the face.

There is greater simplicity visible in the arrangement of the hair for evening. It is more tightly caught to the head and it allows the ears to show just a trifle of their formation, so that there shall be no mistake about the point to which the earring is attached.

In Paris the women love to pull their hair straight back from their faces, and that style of headdress is coming into great vogue for those faces that can stand the strain. When a looser and more irregular line is necessary then there is a hair dressing art which coaxes the hair in such a way that it appears to be perfectly plain and uncompromising, whereas in fact it is artfully covering up all defects and passing itself off as plain.

Combs that are jeweled are all a part of the evening headdress, and, though sometimes they are tucked away so that they glitter only occasionally, still they become a necessary part of the hair arrangement. Often they are large and spreading and real Spanish ornaments in themselves. But at other times they are merely lines of sparkling jewels, used ostensibly to keep the hair in place rather than for any degree of ornamentation.

For the younger girls there are bands of silver and gold, worn across the forehead below the straight line from which the hair strays backward. And when these bands are more pretentious they prove themselves to be rows of precious stones closely laid together to form a sort of fillet banding.

From many of the headdresses, feathers and grapes and tassels of varying sorts droop away at either side, or at both sides. But in almost every case there seems to be some headdress to accompany the evening gown which fashion undoubtedly arises from the fact that gowns are so conspicuously plain that they need the accompaniments of adornments in other directions.

LEGLESS MAN TOURS AMERICA

Transcontinental motoring this season of the year presents many difficulties to the average driver, as in many sections of the country roads are well-nigh impassable.

Here is an instance where an intrepid young man, hampered by physical disabilities, piloted an automobile from Brockton, Mass., to California without any trouble whatever. F. E. Rollins, the driver in question, suffered the loss of both of his legs as the result of an accident in his early youth, but this fact has not lessened his love for motoring nor his skill at the wheel of his Hupmobile roadster.

Rollins, accompanied by his wife, arrived in this state recently, having made the long run from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific without incident, driving every mile of the journey. The contrivance that Rollins has rigged up, enabling him to pilot his car with such skill, is evidence of his mechanical ability. Two perpendicular rods with sockets for the stumps of his legs are hooked up with the car's mechanism by a compound leverage arrangement so perfectly that each may be operated by one's hands with ease. Although Rollins has driven many thousand miles over all kinds of roads and through heavy traffic of many of the country's largest cities, he has never nicked a fender, he asserts.

Rollins, moreover, is a strong booster for his Hupmobile roadster, which he has driven for a long time under all kinds of touring conditions. According to E. W. Milburn, manager of the Greer-Robbins Company, Rollins has stated that in his recent journey from Massachusetts to California the car performed in splendid shape, taking the roads as they were found and never faltering where the going was steep or rugged.

BY J. W. HARRINGTON

Princeton's ban upon the automobile as a recreation, or even as a necessity, for the undergraduate has stirred anew that question: "Is a car a badge of aristocracy?" In some colleges the roadster is held to be a social offense, while in others it is hailed as the very emblem of democracy.

There has never been a ban on the undergraduate use of the automobile at Yale, for instance, and there are many cases on record of poor and ambitious students making their way through college by taking their classmates and their trunks to and from the New Haven station in a jitney. Of course, there are undergraduates at Yale with high-powered cars of the most expensive makes.

There is no rule at Harvard against the students having their own cars. Automobiles are tolerated at Williams, but in recent years, and in fact within the last few months, there has been a decided drift against the student body owning them. A prominent alumnus of Williams said recently that while he did not wish to appear as the personal antagonist of the car he could not but feel it worked in no small degree against good scholarship.

"The automobile in college," he declared, "is not only the foe of trouble. The automobile is a distinctions, but it tends toward stressing the importance of wealth. The college is the ideal republic, or at least it should be. Whenever any element is introduced from the world outside, founded on the fact that a man has something, rather than that he is something, there is bound to be trouble. The automobile is a distracting element. It is likely to take the minds of the students off their studies, and to transfer their mental exertions to spark plugs and carburetors. It is much better for them to have their brains undisturbed by tire troubles. They will get less mental fag by so doing. Joy riding is also subversive of good discipline. The speed with which cars travel in these days brings the 'white ways' of the big cities far too close and if a student is anywhere near New York he is likely to find himself in the lure of its gay night life. I do not at all regard the automobile as a necessity in college or university."

THE PRINCETON MOVEMENT

The feeling in Princeton University is apparently a reflex of the movement against all class or even fraternity distinctions, which was stimulated by Woodrow Wilson and is still fostered by Dr. John Grier Hibben, the present head of the institution. The movement against the often costly and sometimes "exclusive" dining clubs among the students was a sign of this trend toward making the college always safe for democracy. There are some very fine roads in the neighborhood of Nassau Hall, and Philadelphia and New York with all their allurements are within easy reach of the followers of the Tiger.

Students at Union College, Schenectady, whose institution is situated in a town given to the making of locomotives and electrical appliances, take naturally to the automobile because they believe it helps them with their studies. High powered cars belonging to some of the upper classmen may be seen in the neighborhood of Saratoga on nearly any fine day.

At Amherst the possession of a motor by the freshmen and sophomores is considered an affront that must be rebuked sternly by the upper classmen. The luckless ones who presume to bring automobiles to the college are made to use them as free taxis to such an extent that they are often glad to send them home.

There seems to have been a prejudice in the West for several years against the college students parking cars around the campus. It was only recently that the President of Stanford University read a warning in chapel to all student owners of motor cars and told them that they must take them away at once, as he regarded the automobile to be the creator of invidious distinctions and a waster of time. This is especially remarkable in view of the fact that nearly every family in California has an automobile.

A field secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association who has returned recently from a tour of the educational institutions of the Southwest reports that although some students there had cars, nobody seemed to think that they had thereby taken unto themselves any special prestige. He said that during a conference held at Trinity College, Waxahachie, Texas, for instance, all the automobiles owned by the undergraduates were commandeered by the faculty to carry delegates to places of meeting and to and from the stations. At Oklahoma City College the students possessed cars in some instances, but as far as he could see they were not proud of them and were permitted by their classmates to use them without let or hindrance.

"Cars such as one sees in this region," he continued, "are usually what might be called utility machines. They belong largely to farmers' sons, and have evidently seen service as tractors for hauling loads of wood or for taking the milk to market. They are certainly a battered lot and no one seems to think that they are hurting democracy to any great extent. I saw no costly motors, as far as I can remember."

In the universities of the Atlantic seaboard there are many cars accredited to wealthy students, especially those who are addicted to "digger" pipes and gay hatbands. They take to cars of good strong colors, such as bright reds, maroons and purples.

AT COLUMBIA

There are some students in Columbia University who are owners of cars, mostly the lower prices ones, but they appear with them so rarely, owing to the limited parking or garage space in the vicinity of Morningside Height that they get little attention either in the way of envy or of disparagement from their fellows.

In Automobile Row the ban against the student-owned cars proclaimed at Princeton has not produced any grave concern. The feeling is that in an age when there are six million automobiles at least in the United States, and many of them quite cheap, the ownership of one should not cause even a freshman to be unduly puffed with pride.

When one gets into the domain of automobiles for women students the psychology of education is more favorable than it is where young men are concerned. A young woman is not tempted to go joy riding in hilarious company. She may go about the college town on shopping tours, but she is not at all filled with the pride of possession as a rule, and is usually generous in lending the machine to her intimates.

Vassar takes the stand that no cars owned by students may park anywhere in Poughkeepsie, nor may they be placed in garages there. The rule against automobiles was adopted when the horseless vehicles were hailed as only the luxuries of the wealthy. It harks back to the time when the Vanderbilts and the Belmonts were importing milk-hued cars from France, then called "White Ghosts," and looked upon as the swiftly moving symbols of plutocracy.

The rule is, then, that no girl at Vassar shall bring an automobile to Poughkeepsie. A large proportion of the Vassar underclass women do own automobiles, however, and it is very hard for them to observe the regulations made and provided.

AN IMPROVISED TAXI

One girl who has a very snappy, highpowered car brought it up to the campus last Fall at the opening of her junior year and used it as a taxi, applying the fares to the Endowment Fund which is now in full career. She even ran errands for the Faculty.

The college is fully two miles out from the center of the town, and her ministrations were found to be the most competent, for their was never a quicker chauffeur nor a more alert errand boy than she proved to be. She drove the car right up to the very minute the bell called all good students to chapel for the opening of the term, and then her father's handy man appeared and piloted it back to New York.

The blossoming time for student-wned cars at Vassar is commencement time. The seniors who have passed their examinations successfully give themselves over to an "orgy" of limousines and sedans. Every girl who has a car gets it to the campus for the senior vacation.

One girl whose family had promised her a cheap car as a graduation prize had the shock of her life when she found that her eight brothers had pooled their spare resources and had bought for her a high-priced car.

Happily for the sake of healthful out door recreation, the Vassar students are permitted to go riding in the cars owned by visiting undergraduates of Yale, Harvard and Princeton.

The young woman may go without chaperon as long as she as a sister undrgraduate or other feminine companion with her in the car. An embarrassing situation was once imminent when a daring young army aviator had arranged to land on the campus in his airplane and to take one of the students for a sociable flight. There was not room for any chaperon or companion and the wardens were asked to make an exception. The situation was becoming acute when it was eliminated as a status quo by a telegram from the aerial Lochinvar announcing that he could not come because he was in the guard house for making irregular private use of the army machine of which he was the pilot.

The rules at Vassar keep down all exhibitions of means of locomotion and travel. Although horseback riding is encouraged, no girl who owns a mount of her own is permitted to have it at college. Regarding the rules as to automobiles at Vassar, one of the officials of the college said:

"We regard the ownership of an automobile by a student as tending to make distinctions between the wealthy girls and those from families in moderate circumstances. Indeed, there are many rich students who, by their way of living while in college, would never be suspected of having anything more than an ordinary allowance. They are careful to make as little display of their wealth as possible. Vassar is in every sense a dormitory college, for comparatively few of her students live "off campus." Therefore automobiles are unnecessary.

BICYCLES PERMITTED

"The students are permitted to own bicycles, but they often rent these by the year or sell them second-hand at the completion of the course.

"If the girls were permitted to have their own automobiles, however, they would be constantly going to distant points to spend week-ends, and they would lose all the college life which Vassar seeks to gather about the campus. The automobile, therefore, tends to disturb the growth of true college spirit and to create artificial distinctions."

Smith College, at Northampton, Mass., where there are fully as many girls from wealthy families as there are enrolled at Vassar, has no rule whatever against undergraudates driving their own cars.

Smith, indeed, is not classified as a dormitory college, as many of the students live in the town, and some of them at considerable distances from campus. Therefore, it is considered reasonable for the young women of well-to-do families to have cars of their own. There is a tradition even that the powers that be rather encourage the automobile, although there is notring official on record to that effect.

Taken all in all, the question as to whether or not the motor car is a disturbing and distracting factor in the educational life of the United States is one which has two sides.

Export Trade To Be Big Factor

Official figures for the first nine months of 1921 show that of the total of all American passenger automobiles exported to Switzerland, 33 percent were Studebakers.

Werner Risch, Studebaker distributor for Switzerland, recently made a test of the Studebaker light six for economy over an Alpine pass, the length of which was approximately 179 miles. The gasoline average was twenty-six and three-fourth miles to the gallon (288 kilometers to thirty-one liters of fuel).

The sale of several Studebaker special six cars to the Egyptian government was also recently reported by George Valsamidas, Egypt distributor.

Weather Bureau Aids Road Men

The state highway department of Pennsylvania is given advance warning by the United States weather bureau of snowstorms, which may tie up traffic on sections of the 1,200 miles of highway which the department keeps open during the winter.

Missouri Club For Autoists Large

The Automobile Club of Missouri, with a membership of 20,000 motorists, has chapters in all cities and towns in the state. Its principal purposes are to give road service to members anywhere within the state and work for road legislation. More than 150 official garages of the club are under contract and bond to serve its members.

A Bungalow That Trails Behind

"Peerless Villa" is the name of a two-wheeled bungalow 10 by 14 ft. owned by W. Woods, president of the New York Automobile Dealers' Association. It has two bedrooms and a living room and is completely equipped with stove, ice box and other conveniences. It requires only 20 pounds' pull to drag it along the level and consequently is not a noticeable burden to the car.

U. S. CAR WINS RACE

An American made passenger automobile recently won first place in a 430-mile reliability contest, conducted under the auspices of the Royal Automobile Club of Norway. There were eighty cars in the field, representing two continents.

Cross Country In Midwinter

Ending a midwinter transcontinental trip of a considerably speedier character than the midsummer traveler usually makes, Joseph O. Daniels and P. H. Francis of Springfield, Mass., arrived in California recently. The speedometer on their Packard Single Six showed a total of 3,691 miles for the trip and their average daily mileage, despite cold weather, snow and mud, was 248 miles per day.

"We were anxious to get to California, and we didn't waste much time on the road," Daniels reported. "One day we covered 315 miles. Our worst going was in Missourt, where we encountered considerable mud.

"All in all, we were very fortunate in the matter of weather. We got out of New York city just a day ahead of the hundred mile wind that did so much damage on Manhattan island. We did not encounter a single serious storm en route, and reached southern California just after the roads were getting in good shape again after the floods.

"We kept close track of the fuel consumed as I was very anxious to check the Packard's performance in all sorts of going. We averaged just seventeen miles per gallon for the entire trip, which we thought excellent for a midwinter trip. What pleased me still more was the comfort with which we made the trip. I came across last winter in a much larger car, but found the trip in the Packard not nearly so tiring."

Gunn Again Heads Lincoln Highway

James Newton Gunn, president of the United States Tire company, has again been prevailed upon to accept the presidency of the Lincoln Highway association.

F. A. Seiberling and Roy D. Chapin, vice presidents, also are serving second terms as officers of the great trans-continential highway project.

1,050,740 Cars And Trucks Built By Ford In 1921

Retail sales of Ford cars, trucks and Fordson tractors, have exceeded the 1,000,000 mark for the year 1921, according to a statement just issued by the Ford Motor Company. The Ford factory and assembly plant production figures reached a total of 1,050,740 cars and tractors for the year, with retail sales by dealers approximately 1,093,000, which in the United States alone surpassed the 1920 retail sales record by 104,213 Ford cars and trucks.

Officials of the Ford company state that the outlook for 1922 is decidedly optimistic. In fact, concrete evidences already exist in that car and truck retail sales for December, 1921, exceeded December, 1920 sales by almost 25 percent and Fordson tractor retail sales for the same periods show an increase of over 100 percent for December 1921, as well as an increase over the total tractor sales for the month of November.

Accident To Auto Tires Lessened

Accidents to automobile tires have been reduced to a minimum in recent years. This is due to two causes—improvement in tire construction and better roads. In an investigation covering 5,000 tires, conducted by one of its large consumers, says the United States Tire Company, the cost of tire repairs was found to average slightly under 1 percent of the cost of the tires.

HUGE SHIPMENT OF CARS

The largest shipment on record of a single product from a factory to one destination is a solid train of 100 carloads of automobiles with an approximate value of $500,000, from New York to California. There are five automobiles to each freight car.

S.B.C. RESERVES TOWN HALL FOR BOXING TOURNEY

April 5th And 6th Set For Return Meet With Carlisle Men

CLUB IS BADLY CRIPPLED

Martin, Wilson And Siemssen Cannot Fight; Untutored Pugs Fail

If all goes well and the fighters come out to fight, so that a decent program can be arranged, Wednesday and Thursday, April 5 and 6 will see a big Boxing Tournament between Shanghai's best mit artists and the renovated pugs of the British ship Carlisle.

The Town Hall is tentatively booked now for the big occasion. All that is needed are local scrappers to fill the card. Local fight promoters have been advertising for talent to give the navy men an interesting evening, but, from all hearsay about the streets Shanghai men are not in fighting mood just now.

The Boxing Club's Ad for volunteers to meet the sailor men was aimed chiefly at those mysterious unknown "Untutored Pugs," who some time ago bewailed the fact they never had a chance to fight. They begged at that time for bookings with the tutored Boxing Club men. And then they faded. If the writer's information is correct none of the said "untutored" pugs have offered to climb into the ring against anybody.

CLUB IS CRIPPLED

The Boxing Club, should the tournament be finally arranged will have to stand the brunt if not the whole of the Navy attack. And, with their star men: Martin, too busy in Customs work to train, Wilson forbidden by his doctor ever to enter the ring again because of heart trouble, and Eddie Siemssen out of condition and not likely to get down to fine fighting trim again, the prospects for the landsmen are not too bright.

On top of all of that the Carlisle men are undergoing a severe training period at their headquarters by courtesy of the Club; they have been perfecting themselves in the fine points of boxing since their defeat here by the local clubmen a year ago. They are expected to come ashore this trip ready to battle the best of local sluggers for more than a creditable showing.

The local club men, it is understood are a trifle worried over the coming tournament, though they are pleased, too, in another way, that the competitions have been brought down to a fifty-fifty, even-up basis. They are worried that they may lose their collective win over the Carlisle a year ago; they are pleased to know that they will be given a hustling, boxing, fighting tussle in every one of the approaching bouts. With a few good men, particularly of the lighter class ready and fit to fight however they are hoping to win again a majority of the events.

HUSKIES ARE NEEDED

The best bets of the local club now, in the absence of Martin, Wilson and the bigger Siemssen, not to mention the failure of the above-mentioned "untutored" pugs, are Carlson, Johansson, "Baby" Siemssen, and their newest "find" Joe Chaney. These men all are counted upon to win. And with an even break on one or two other bouts, losses in the heavier events might be offset.

There is yet a chance however that Mr. G. H. Parkes, the local fight promoter may dig up two or more men for the heavier sailors. There will be Darbyshire, the fighting sailor who showed so well here at the last boxing tourney, and the welterweight champion of the Far Eastern fleet, Bowdidge, with perhaps one or two other big men to provide with first class opponents. Parkes is combing the town over daily for men worthy to enter such matches, and he is even yet hopeful of finding them.

Chaney will figure in one of the final or semi-final events, probably a 10-round bout for the J. Spunt trophy. The younger Siemssen is competent to give a few pounds to any amateur and may take his match well up into weight. Should Eddie Siemssen get into condition he could handle most any of the boat's welters. Parkes does not announce just who are to fight on his card, but it may be assumed that he has others.

At any rate the Town Hall is engaged for the milling; a special latest model ring has been constructed by the P. W. D.—one of the kind with no center posts to block the view, and Parkes is still hunting down those "untutored pugs" who were begging to fight a while ago, but are keeping well under cover now when Shanghai needs them. Now is their time to join up, take a little tutoring from an enthusiastic expert, and give the Carlisle men a good reception on April 5 and 6.

Yankees' Hero Pitcher Weds

BASEBALL CLUB TO START DRIVE ON APRIL FIRST

Secretary and Treasurer, Clement J. Smith, more commonly known as Jack Smith, of the Shanghai Amateur Baseball Club has been burning the midnight oil for the past week, preparing a membership drive for this season.

On April first every one of 650 last year's members will receive notice of renewal of his or her membership dues, with the request that the necessary Ten Mexican Dollars be forwarded to either Clement J. Smith, American-Asiatic Underwriters, 15 Nanking Road, or H. B. Gallop, American Paper Exports, Inc., 2 Siking Road. They will receive the valued pasteboard that will enable them to witness this year's games from the grandstands in peace and comfort, though there promises to be very little peace with the many navy and army teams that will be bombarding the local players.

Newer arrivals in town are invited to join and every effort will be made to sign up anyone who even mentions the word baseball. It is hoped that at least 350 new members can be enrolled and bring the club membership for 1922 up to 1,000 members. In view of the exceptionally successful season last year and the promising outlook for a bigger season this year, the management of the club expect little difficulty in securing the necessary 350 new members.

Applications for membership have already been received from many new arrivals in Shanghai and it is hoped that anyone desiring to join the club will communicate with Jack Smith immediately. To lessen the burden for Smith and to facilitate matters all that is necessary is Ten Mexican Dollars and your address, and you automatically become a full fledged member, with the option of being a ball player, or to sit in the grand stand and criticise the players, the management and everybody in general, even though you will always be enjoying yourself.

The Prince of Wales Stakes, a one-mile event for old ponies and The Renown Plate, for griffins of this year, will be the features of the race meeting to be held in Hongkong on April 7 in honor of the Prince of Wales' visit. The Renown Plate will be three quarters of a mile. It is expected that the Prince will ride in this race.

Sportsman Dahlia, which will probably be ridden by Frank Vida of Shanghai, Spotted and Hatton are the favorites for the Prince of Wales stakes. Hongkong race followers look for Multum in Parvo, Shining Star and Dingo, late Kiangsu King, to show in the griffin race.

Training has been going on for about a week.

FIRST HOCKEY INTERPORT XI LOSE TO REST

The second of a series of games between the eleven elected to represent Shanghai in the coming Interport Hockey Tourney for the Championship of North China, to be contested at Tientsin by Tientsin, Peking and Shanghai, was played off yesterday afternoon at the Widow's Monument Grounds, at the Race Course.

While it was the general belief prior to the game that it was to be the final test, the outcome of the game leaves the tentative team in more than a little doubt. And it has been proposed to play off at least a couple of more tests, before the Shanghai eleven is finally picked.

In yesterday's match The Rest came out winners following a game remarkable for its lack of anything like enthusiasm or pep. The score was 3-0 in their favor, the probables putting up no fight at all.

It is true that individual stars hastily formed into a team will not show to advantage, and consequently the Shanghai eleven lacked cohesion, team work and understanding of each other's methods that make for a close-knit invincible team.

On the other hand, it appears that The Rest, from having played together on previous occasions, were not strangers on the same side, and their combination was better, though nothing to fall over.

The first half of the game saw no score, the play being slow and aimless, giving one the impression of a practice game—and a rather irksome one—being run off.

In the second half, things bucked up a bit, and the possibles invaded the enemy in something like real style. It was not long before Bisha Singh had netted, subsequent to an opening that presented itself.

The second goal came off Gomes' stick—and a snappy sho it was. Not five minutes elapsed when Bisha Singh, from midfield, shot and scored—somewhat to his surprise, one could not help thinking.

With the game well over, Mann, who captains the Shanghai team, decided that more practice was necessary, and it is to be hoped that a series of two or more games can be arranged, in order to facilitate the selection of the team, as well as to allow the chosen ones to get acquainted with itself and its ways of doing things.

This seems to be all the more necessary in view of the fact that word has been received from Tegetmeier, of the Shanghai Harlequin team, who is now in Tientsin, to the effect that Shanghai will have to send along its strongest eleven, who will then have all their work cut out to carry off the victory.

From information at present available, the Shanghai team is to leave at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, April 13, from Shanghai North station, and is due to arrive at Tientsin at 6:25 p.m. the following day, Friday. The game against Tientsin will be played off Saturday afternoon, while Peking's eleven, come down to Tientsin to meet Shanghai will have their turn on Monday morning. The same afternoon will see Shanghai's return—with or without the title, according to the decision of whatever Fates shall rule.

Moosa And Cumine Each Count Goals; Score Was 2-0; Boys Earned The Trophy On Brilliant Play Of Star Performers And Better Combination

BY "WHISTLE".

Yesterday's game was a fine finish to the Scottowe Cup competition, providing fast football and introducing a second League team to the Cup as holders.

The game opened with the School playing with the wind and they were not long in settling down to work, Johansson making a good run and finishing with a straight shot, which Leach cleared safely. Pressure continued round the Club goal for a while, but the wind spoilt several promising efforts.

Then the Club forwards began to come away, and Dailey taking a useful cross pass from Deer, put in a hard shot which Brockett handled correctly. A moment later Nash and Clifford combined, giving the latter a chance; he ran through and drove hard, but straight to Brockett who was passing up nothing.

MANY CHANCES WERE LOST

A chance was lost when Koning taking a pass from Clifford put the ball well outside. Then the School broke loose again and Cumine went right down and put a perfect center across, but no one wanted it.

Clifford then tried a high dropping shot into the wind which gave a fine chance, coming down in front of goal, only Koning was not there and Madar cleared in comfort.

Again Cumine got away finishing with a shot which dropped right into the corner. Leach was good enough, however, and got it away. The Club right then started moving and Deer getting away passed to Nash, who sent in a screw which Brockett exchanged for a corner. At last the School pressure produced results. Moosa shooting from well out and beating Leach with a hard rising shot, put the School one up.

CLUB TRIES PRESSURE

The Club again began to press but their attacks finished with long shots against the wind, and had not enough sting behind. One from Deer which dropped clear in front of goal should have been an equaliser, but the center forward was not up, and the backs had time to think things out before he arrived.

Half time found the School one up but facing the wind, and it looked a rather small balance, but they went straight to it and Johansson running through brought Leach out to save. The Club soon began to press and for a while the School defense had hard work to clear against the wind, but there was no finish to the Club work; pass after pass came across but Koning was hanging back all the time. Brockett was busy and his joss was working over time, a stinger from De Mann skimmed the cross bar, just where he wasn't, and a moment later Clifford headed over from a corner, in both cases six inches lower would have done the trick.

Dailey tried then, and put in a fine dropper which Brockett fisted and he had to hit it again before he got it clear.

CUMINE SCORES SECOND

Nothing resulting from all the Club pressure, the boys decided to try again. Madar went away on the right and passed across, Cumine streaked in and finished with a lovely curling shot which had Leach beaten. A period of even rushes followed. Nash and Dailey worked down the left and Nash put a nice one across, but no one was there to attend to it. A dangerous rush by the School succeeded this, the three insides got away, and only smart tactics by Ewing saved Leach from trouble.

Perhaps the superiority of the boys showed most at this stage of the game. The Club hung about, tried to dribble, and then lost it, and when a pass did come across, there was no one up to finish.

BOYS TRIED FOR MORE

The boys passed, and passed again, and then went on passing, stringing out the Club defense and keeping Leach guessing. They looked like scoring several more, and Cumine walking through five of the defense passed to Drake; he was too slow shooting, though, and Leach was ready when he did eventually part with it. Then Drake got away, but Brown caught him up and cleared.

One final spurt by the Club gave Brockett a chance to bring off some fine saves, he turned a hot one from Nash over the bar. Another from Clifford hit the bar and Koning heading the rebound, Brockett cleared with a fine punch.

Nothing more happened and the boys took the cup with a well

Ruth And Meusel Are Out Of Luck, Says Baseball Head

CLUB BEATS NAVY IN LAST RUGGER MATCH OF YEAR

In the last Rugby match of the season the Club defeated the Navy by a score of 20 to 3.

The Navy made a determined effort from the start, pressing hard, but the Club soon offset their speed and Gotch notched a fine drop goal. He tried another a short time later but the wind, blowing across the field, carried the ball wide. Sparkes scored a try for the Club and then Nichols scored a try which Gotch converted.

Bichard scored after half-time and before the finish Goolden scored a try which Gotch again converted. The sailors played well, the forwards particularly so. Skinner was one of the outstanding Navy contenders and scored a penalty goal, which was not converted.

Sporting Editor's Letter Box

To The Sporting Editor,
THE CHINA PRESS

The annual football match between the S.N.R.R.C. and the S.H.N.R.R.C. was played off last Saturday. On account of only six regular men of S.H.N.R.R.C. turning out at that game the latter were badly beaten by a score of six to nil, although the two fullbacks and the goalkeeper did their excellent part. The football season of the railroad teams was closed after that game. The season proved a success.

The combined team of the two railways played eleven games during the season with only one game lost. They were beaten by the Tung Wu Club early in the season by 3-1 without any practice.

Tung Wu, 1-3.
Medhurst college, 3-1.
Alumni Public School for Chinese, 6-0.
Chih Nan. Institute, 1-0.
Tung Chih College, 1-1.
Chekiang 2nd Middle School, Kashing, 4-1.
Nanking Union Football Club, 1-1.
Arnold Bros, 4-0.
Hangchow Christian College, 1-1.
Medhurst College, 8-0.
Chinese Co., S.V.C., 0-0.

Total scores were: Railway team 30, Opponents 8.

Yours truly,
A PLAYER.

Golf Pro Drives 415 Yards; Goes 80 Yards Beyond Hole

London, (by mail).—A drive of 415 yards is credited to Frank Dennis, 20-year-old professional of the Crewe Golf Club. The distance is vouched for by two members. The ball was hit from a tee slightly above the green, 335 yards away. It pitched on the ground, which was frost-bound, and ran over the green 80 yards beyond the hole. Dennis' achievement is considered one of the greatest recorded.

James Braid, a leading English professional, has driven a ball on frost-bound ground at Walton Heath a distance of 395 yards, and declares that to be his longest drive. H. H. Horne, another British professional, noted for long-distance driving, has recorded a distance of 388 yards at North Berwick.

"Come On," Says Dempsey; Anxious To Close Match

"Bring On Wills, Gibbons, Martin, Brennan, Fulton Or Any One Else"

BY JACK DEMPSEY

It begins to look as if I'm going to have a little fistic work apportioned to me after all.

The sportive public seems a bit anxious to have me back in harness—and everybody is putting forth somebody labeled as "the logical opponent." They've got Wills, Gibbons, Martin, Brennan, Fulton and a half dozen others tagged that way. Here's the hope that very soon they'll settle upon one fellow of that group and say to me:

"Fight him."

That'll make me happy.

I draw no color line. If the folks think that Wills is the toughest heavyweight in the world, and the public wants me to mix it with him, and a promoter steps forward who is willing to talk real money for the "go"—I'll be there to answer the bell. But up to this moment, despite all the "smoking up" of the match which Billy Brady, of New York, has attempted, I can't detect any frantic eagerness on the part of the fight fans to have me take on Wills.

TOM GIBBONS?—SURE

I would like nothing better than a crack at Fulton—but I don't know any promoter who would care to match us. Likewise, I'd like to tackle Bill Brennan again, just to convince him beyond the possibility of any future argument that I'm the better man. But that match perhaps can't go through.

Tom Gibbons?

Sure—why not? If the folks think Tom is the fellow to fight me, I'm agreeable. A mighty fine boy is Tommy. Met him when I was in Atlantic City training for Carpentier. I've watched his record since then. That boy has been coming fast—no mistake about that. In fact, his knockout record is a wonder.

A lot of people try to belittle the twenty-one knockout triumphs record of Gibbons in his last twenty-two starts. That's hokum. Nobody's soft in the prize ring, I know. And knocking out a so-called easy mark is just as tough a job as putting away a great fighter. In fact, it's sometimes a lot harder.

ANXIOUS TO CLOSE MATCH

If you get a fellow into the ring with you who thinks he has a chance to whip you he'll open up and take the offensive. That will leave a few openings here and there and then you've got the chance to sock him on the chin or in the body. But when a man goes into the ring with you resolved to fight wholly on the defensive, and try by every means to stay the limit it's a tough job to crack him to sleep.

The one thing I'm most anxious to happen is the closing of a match. I want to fight—anybody, anywhere. It wouldn't take more than a month for me to get into tip-top shape.

What I'm hoping is that Jack Kearns can arrange three or four bouts for me in a row. Then, when I once get into fighting trim, I can keep right at the work until I've cleaned up all the formidable fellows and completely established my championship claims—or surrendered the title in trying.

ST. JOHN'S AND SHANGHAI WIN AT BASKETBALL

Yesterday's basketball games in the Inter-Collegiate basketball league tied up first position with honors divided between St. John's and Shanghai Baptist College, and if the same form carries through in the one remaining game of importance this season, first place will be shared by three teams at the end of the season—St. John's Shanghai College and Soochow. Whatever breaks a playoff is planned for, either between St. John's and Shanghai, or in a new three-cornered tournament with Soochow at the other end of the triangle.

St. John's won over Soochow yesterday, 29-7, on their home floor, and Shanghai College beat Nanyang 36-22 at the Haskell Gym at Yangtszepoo. The one important game of the season remaining is that between St. John's and Nanyang scheduled for March 31.

The standings of the colleges today are:

Team	Won	Lost	Pctg.
Shanghai	4	1	800
Soochow	4	1	800
St. John's	3	1	750
Nanyang	2	2	500
Nanking	0	4	000
S. E. Univ.	0	4	000

Woo of St. John's was the star of the match against Soochow yesterday. He was all over the floor, and aside from counting high in points scored himself, worked cleverly and effectively in helping his other teammates to count. The St. John's men had the advantage in team work, passing and shooting and also in defence. The score at half time was 12-3. Mr. T. T. Zee refereed, and Mr. Jackson umpired.

FINE PROGRAM OF RACES RUN AT KIANGWAN

Two Of First Four Events On Card Result In Dead Heats

MARLOW PAYS $177

Finishes Neck And Neck With Jason, Ridden By Bremner

Excellent racing with favorites running fairly closely to form and with resultant dividends held to moderate levels characterised yesterday's race meeting at the Kiangwan course. A trace of winter's chill in the air had little effect on the size of the crowd which was big enough to fill all the stands to overflowing and brilliant sunshine was a factor in the enjoyment of the program provided. The course was hard and fast, as is reflected in the times recorded some of which were in striking distance at least of track records.

Mr. Toeg's grey pony Nelson with Mr. Haimovitch in the saddle repeated a performance of two weeks ago in the first event yesterday, providing one of the biggest upsets of the day when Nelson won from Everytime and Idealist. This first big dividend for win was $99.

In general all of the events of the program were hard fought contests and two of the first four races resulted in dead heats. In the second race Jason, ridden by Mr. S. B. Bremner and Marlow, ridden by Mr. Pinkerton finished in first place neck and neck. The dividend paid on Marlow was the largest of the day, $177.70.

The finish of the one steeplechase of the program, the fourth race, brought the whole throng of spectators to a high pitch of excitement, for at the end of the gruelling two-mile contest Messrs. Beith and Dalgarno's Prelate, ridden by Mr. Elliott, and Wiltshire, ridden by Mr. Harper galloped into a hard finish neck and neck with Djemnah following.

BAER SAYS 'BUGS': THE GLUTT GLUTS ROUGHTOWN GINK

O. K.'s Him In One Round, But Gink Is No Good In Those Short Fights

BY 'BUGS' BAER

Friends in name only:

Although you don't mention it you say that Feet Furst was a better man than Gink Fowler. While the truth of this he has never been questioned, it is well known in Roughtown that in his most successful battles Furst always finished second.

No man who ever stopped an arc handle with a brown derby is unaware that Feet would have flattened himself and Gink if the fight had gone long enough to allow Feet to get up from the canvas.

The fact that Feet taught a Scranton miner how to crochet doilies is poor reasons for sending Feet to jail. But time will heal all jail sentences if they are short enough. A movement is now on foot to collect all the empty tomato cans and melt them into a statue of Gink Fowler, the empty champion.

Yours if you can prove it,
JIMMIE LAWLOR.

When he met The Glutt he double-krissed by his manager, who told him The Glutt used to collect moonbeams on dark nights.

They shook hands in the middle of the ring, when Gink discovered The Glutt had his hands taped by the Baldwin Locomotive Works and The Glutt discovered that Gink's gloves had been furnished by the Haverstraw Hollow Tile Building Company.

Time was called in order to clear the arena of noncombatants and the boys sparred in neutral corners of the ring.

The Glutt nailed Gink with a wicked feint, and Gink went south like a robin in a blizzard.

He was out nine days. That fight only went one round.

The referee counted over Gink by sunsets. Gink was out only nine sunsets, so he was still champion.

Another fight was established, and again The Glutt drummed Gink to earth with a wicked left that missed.

Ging settled like grounds in cold coffee. The referee had only torn nine leaves off the calendar when Gink recovered in time to have his temperature taken.

Gink wasn't satisfied and demanded a return beating.

This time he had trained and lasted almost two rounds.

Another time and The Glutt pasted Gink like a label in three rounds.

Two weeks later Gink lasted four rounds with The Glutt.

A month in arrears and Gink lasted five.

A year had elapsed between the first and second acts when Gink secured another battle with The Glutt.

This time Gink lasted six rounds. But he ain't discouraged.

deserved victory. On the day's play they were the better team and took most of the play.

For the School, the forwards and the goalkeeper were the star performers, and in the forward line Cumine and Johansson were the pick. Brockett in goal gave a fine display, showing good judgment in the frequent melees in front of goal which is a good test of goalkeeping. The rest of the defense was adequate to tackle the forwards opposed to them but a bustling center forward would have made things look different.

For the Club, Ewing was the outstanding figure, the other halves worked hard, but failed to back up enough when the wind was with them.

Leach was good and saved the Club a lot. Forshaw steady as usual found the pace a bit too strong. Deer and Dailey, the two outside forwards, showed up best; the others never seemed up to take their passes even with the wind behind and several promising chances were lost through this.

Mr. Gabbutt handled the game very well and to the satisfaction of all but the extreme partisans. As a sample of the type of spectator who is dissatisfied with our long suffering referees the following will illustrate their exact knowledge of the rules. In the first half an offside decision was given near the Club's goal, and one irate gentleman indignantly demanded a penalty!!

(Reuter's Service)

London, March 24.—The following is the result of the Grand National run today at Liverpool:

1.—Music Hall.
2.—Drifter.
3.—Taffytus.

Thirty-two ran. Won by twelve lengths, six lengths separating second and third.

The betting was:
Music Hall 100 to 9.
Drifter 18 to 1.
Taffytus 66 to 1.

Music Hall, which upset the dope in the Grand National, is owned by Mr. Hugh Kershaw, and was not figured to place in the Liverpool classic, according to the London sporting writers. Taffytus, which was a 66-1 shot, and made the third place, is owned by J. C. Builteel. The horse Drifter is the property of Joseph Widger.

There were 32 horses entered in the race and the early-training dope figured Shaun Spada, owned by Sir M. McAlpine, or Arrivale, in C. R. Baron's stable, to figure in first and second places.

LONDON BOXING FANS KEEN FOR BIG BOUT MONDAY

London, March 24.—With four home champions expected to uphold their titles shortly, and the prospect of seeing Carpentier again in a London ring, English enthusiasts are following the boxing game closely.

George Cook recently defeated by Carpentier returns to the ring next Monday night, meeting Joe Beckett, the English champion, in a match labelled "the British Empire heavy-weight championship. This same bill will include a bout between Joe Fox, the holder of the feather-weight belt, and the Belgian, Arthur Wyns, postponed from February because the former fell a victim to the influenza epidemic. Wyns has already beaten one English featherweight champion, Mike Honeyman.

Boy McCormick, who lost last November to Ted "Kid" Lewis, the middleweight holder well-known in America, will meet Jack Bloomfield in two weeks to decide future possession of the light heavy-weight belt, now held by McCormick.

Lewis is also recovering from an attack of the "flu" and is expected to be in perfect condition for his match with Carpentier which, according to present arrangements, will be held here about the middle of April.

Lydia Lipkowska

Singing in marvellous voice Lydia Lipkowska completely captivated her second Shanghai audience at the Olympic Theater last night. Those who attended the first recital came prepared for further delightful things in the way of song and piano numbers, and their expectations were more than fulfilled. The program was in costume, which lent to the effectiveness of the numbers.

All of her efforts were fine, and brought forth repeated calls from the audience, but perhaps the group of Russian songs saw Lipkowska in most marvellous mood. The arietta from Snegourotchka was a vision of color out of Russia's past, flashing with gems and with her green boots giving a gypsy touch to her Russian beauty. Her singing of the Cradle Song was remarkable for the technical play which she gave the notes and her rendering of the sad song of Dragomijsky was touchingly sympathetic.

The group of French Songs brought enthusiastic applause from the large audience. They were done in the French spirit, light and entrancing, with amour playing prominently through.

Sklarevski scored heavily with his second night's audience as he did at the first. His Scherzo was a brilliant execution of this most difficult of Chopin—most difficult of composers—effort and he made the audience feel that it was really Chopin. The Legende St. Francis inspired the demand for several encores and at the conclusion of his first group he was called on to respond to six curtain calls.

It is announced that the two final Lipkowska concerts will be given at the Lyceum Theater on Thursday, March 30, and on April 1.
